Ending a search of over six months, the trustees of the Uni-versity of Massachusetts Tues-day named John William Lederle, 48, professor of political science and director of the Institute of Public Administration at the University of Michigan, r president of the University Massachusetts.

The salary of the new president will be at the discretion of the trustees, between $20,000 and $25,000 a year, plus expense allowances and housing. The salary bill was finally passed by the Massachusetts Senate after some bitter fighting the last week of June. It had been given relatively easy House passage many months earlier.

Lederle, who is an attorney and a doctor of philosophy, will succeed the controversial Jean Paul Mather who announced his resignation last fall at the height of a fight that ended in pay raises for the university faculty. Mather fought for the UM without restraint and in his administration saw millions ob-tained for new construction and expansion of the university in Amherst. He gained the freedom bill which gave the trustees greater ability in obtaining and retaining a fine faculty.

The choice of Lederle was un animous, according to a board member. Earlier the trustees in-terviewed eight candidates who had been selected from more than had been selected from more than a hundred possible choices from all over the United States.

UM trustee board chairman Frank L. Boyden of Deerfield said Dr. Lederle is expected to assume his new duties late in September. He termed Lederle "both a distinguished scholar and a skilled and experienced administrator. He comes to us after a istrator. He comes to us after a long period of service at the Uni-versity of Michigan, one of the great public insitutions of higher arning in the United States."

Dr. Boyden said he wished to express his gratitude to Gov. Furcolo for his aid in recruiting a new president and to members of new president and to members of the Legislature of both parties for their "bipartisan aupport of the salary increase which was so vital if men of high caliber were to be attracted to the presidency. Such support from the leaders of state government assures Massachusetts of an outstanding position in the field of public higher education.

Dr. Maxwell H. Goldberg, eduor and author, has been named the first University Professor at the University of Massachusetts, it was announced Friday by Prov-ost Shannon McCune.

Dr. Goldberg, head of the English department from 1935 to 1960, will undertake activities re-lating to the academic program of the University at large.

The new professorship, one of number to be established the University, was made possible as a result of more flexible personnel grades proposed by the Board of Trustees and ratified in February by the State legislature. The grades were instituted as a means of aiding the University in the recruitment and retention of outstanding educators.

A FRIENDLY MESSAGE

Hi, there! I'm the friendly editorial writer that writes friendly editorials to greet the Freshmen in a friendly manner. This is one of those chummy little messages designed for consumption by that happy little group. By now all you Freshmen must be well aware what a message to the Freshmen is. It, I am referring to a message to the Freshmen, is a speech, letter, note, epistle, encyclical, bull, or whatever you may wish to call it, that runs to about six thousand words of no more than two syllables each, that, unless the author has fouled up, has nothing to say.

This is one of them there things. Read it carefully. There are very few words of more than two syllables. And, keeping to tradition, which has to be mentioned, it has nothing to say. But this cheery little note will not run to six, or so, thousand words. Nor will it offer the same maudlin greetings of welcome aboard and all that jazz.

In fact, there are only 193 words in this piece. And as far a greeting. It wouldn't have been half so crowded if you had all stayed home.

WHAT IS A STUDENT?

In attempting to answer the question "what is a student?" we encounter the danger of looking for the answer of examining masses of students as they are presented to us in every day life. Here we become involved in a web of endless characterization which can only lead us to fruitless despair and never to even the possibility of a conclusive statement.

More fruitful, perhaps, it would be to look at the word "student" and analyze its meaning in terms of the individual human being. A student, of course, is one who studies, or more accurately, perhaps, one who is committed to study. Involved in such a commitment is an admission that one does not know all there is to know about reality, but that one can apprehend and make a part of oneself aspects of reality hitherto unknown. Involved more basically, perhaps, in the commitment is an asumption that there is a reality outside of oneself, and that this reality can be apprehended by the mind.

More specifically, an individual who enters the classroom system of education, commits himself to the concept that he is capable of being taught by another human being and also acknowledges that this human being may be able to give him insight into the techniques of grasping aspects of reality.

Reducted to a basic definition, this is what is meant by the word "student" and the individual who says "I am a student" must be prepared to fulfill the commitments he made when he assumed that title.

Care should be taken against synthesizing a criterion of behavior from what one observes in other individual students. Each individual student takes upon himself the responsibility for what kind of student he is or will be. No attempt should be made to deny responsibility for behavior merely because it is observed in others. Ultimately each student, and more significantly, each individual will create for himself a definition uniquely his own, and ultimately, he must stand or fall on his own creation.

In A Very Minor Key

To all freshmen—welcome. And to all upperclassmen, don't tell me you forgot your wading boots again. You KNEW the mud would be here—it was here when we left last spring. All they've done is move some of it around.

This edition of the Collegian is being published at this time for a number of reasons, not the least of which is our feeling of public service. We want you to have something to read as you stand in line in the Bookstore, at the Commons, and divers and sundry other places too numerous to mention. After you've read it, it rolls up to make a handy fly-swatter. Also tears easily for making paperdolls, and as a last resort, will provide ammunition for spitball fights.

Enough for this rubbish. It is fall, classes have not yet begun, and we all know we are here to STUDY. Buckle down, get to work, nose to the grindstone and all that—Rubbish continues after this enthusiasm nonsense has worn off.

THE GOOD TEACHER

by MARK VAN DOREN

(Poet and professor of Columbia University in an address at the inauguration of President Richard Glenn Gettell of Mount Holyoke College.)

The words of a teacher bear so many responsibilities that if all of them were ever present in his mind together he would grow as silent as the grave.

The teacher's responsibility to the student is so huge and heavy a thing that no teacher in his right mind considers it at all. No good teacher, I mean. For a good teacher has had the experience of learning that his words have an effect upon those who sit before him: an effect ... that will endure for decades ...

But if he commenced each of his classes by wondering what future actions or thoughts were going to be the result of what he said, if he asked himself seriously what characters he was going to shape, if ever so oddly or so little, he might be terrified before he spoke one word. Normally he is blessed with a healthy indifference to such considerations. He is concerned with what he is going to say, and with whether or not it is true.

I scarcely need to explain that the kind of teacher I have in view is the kind for whom the subject was created. It is his subject; he spends his life thinking about it, whether in or out of class; it is his second if not his first nature; it is what gives him joy. No student ever fails to be aware of this.

A teacher can fool his colleagues; he may even fool his president; but he never fools his students. They know when he loves his subject and when he does not.

They may think such love to be a queer thing, and they may resolve never to fall victim to it themselves; but their respect for it will never cease. And respect for a subject, like respect for an idea, is the beginning of wisdom ...

The teacher's responsibility to his subject is so serious a thing that it of course precludes anything like a parade of personality for its own sake. The good teacher is not trying to be a personality; he is trying to be a person who understands his subject and sinks himself into it. If he could, he would disappear there altogether.

The whimsical teacher—who cares only to impress his brilliance upon his class, or to deliver himself of eccentric opinions in the belief that such opinions are more interesting than the knowledge would be—is immemorially contemptible. His students may like him for a while, but in the end they despise him for his condescension to his subject.

The subject is a third thing that transcends both the teacher and the student. It is what the students should contemplate. It is the only live thing in the room.

The truly personal teacher is the most responsible to his subject. Because he knows it to be more important than himself, he is humble in its presence, and would rather die than misrepresent it. It existed before him, and will exist after him

All men know the same things, or the same thing: the same world. One might think it easy to do this, but it is so difficult that only a few succeed. We call them great men and women.

What, for instance, is a great poet? One who sees what nobody else does? The contrary is surely true. If Shakespeare is the greatest poet, or Homer, or Dante . . . the reason is not that he saw what nobody ever saw before; he saw what everyone has seen, but with a clarity, intensity, and finally, a humility which makes his subject even more interesting to us than he is.

It was more interesting to him than his own self ever was; which is why we know so little about him, and why we know so much about the stories he told, the people he understood ...

So what shall we say of a teacher who makes his students hate Shakespeare? We shall say first of all that the teacher must have hated Shakespeare too. He only thought he loved him or worse yet, he pretended that he did...

The good teacher means it when he says he hopes his students will forget him. He never means, of course, that he hopes they will forget the subject. For him that would be tragedy; it would mean that he himself had not existed.

The responsibilities of the teacher are many and yet one. They are to himself, to his subject, to his students, to society, and to the truth . . .

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

Due to last year's controversy concerning our organization, we, the members of the Maroon Key have been striving to better ourselves for the benefit of the University of Massachusetts and the other honorary societies which exist here on campus. We realize that the selection of the Keys was not conducted in a manner proper to democratic theory and equal rights for all. However, the fact remains: we did not select ourselves.

Recognizing the inadequacies which existed last year, we have proceeded to change the constitution and a new method for selection of members has been instituted. This method raises the standard of the potential Key academically and discounts any political questions such as fraternity affiliation. The present members sincerely feel that this method is a fair and proper system of selection.

Since controversy also existed on the merits of our present membership, we have taken steps to better the organization in that direction. Several members have resigned and our present membership meets the standards implicit in the present constitution. All members have the required average and no member is on disciplinary probation as of 12 September 1960.

Our officers and executive committee have worked hard thus far to renew the status of the organization, and they will continue to do so in the direction of serving our university in an enlarged area. This year the New England Key Convention will be held here at the University, and we will do our utmost to make it the best convention ever. With some spirit and cooperation from our fellow schoolmates and especially, classmates, we can develop the Maroon Key into a true honorary organization and an example which the other honorary groups on campus can follow.

Sincerely, The Maroon Key Members Classes of '63

Mademoiselle Contest

Mademoiselle magazine announces that its 1960-61 College Board Contest is now open to women undergraduates under twenty-six years old who are regularly enrolled in an accredited college or junior college. The contest offers a chance at winning one of twenty Guest Editorships—a month on the staff of Mademoiselle.

To try out for membership on the College Board a girl may write a criticism (1200 words or more) of the editorial section of a current issue of Mademoiselle or depict in words or drawings the follies of her campus. (For other suggestions write to the magazine.) You will be notified by January 1, 1961 whether your tryout has been accepted.

Each College Board member will do one assignment for Mademoiselle. The list of assignments to choose from will appear in the January issue of Mademoiselle. There will be a variety of selections, so a girl will be able to pick one that best suits her interests. (Prizes will be given for best tryouts and assignments.)

College Board members who come out among the top twenty on the tryout and assignment win a salaried month (June) in New York as Guest Editors on the staff of Mademoiselle. Besides working as apprentices to Mademoiselle editors, Guest Editors will be featured in the August issue, and will represent the college girl in editorial meetings held to plan articles and fashions for forthcoming issues of the magazine.

November 30 is the deadline for submitting the tryout assignment. For more detailed information, write to College Board Contest, Mademoiselle, 575 Madison Avenue, New York 22, requesting the Contest Rules Book.

Student attention is called to a new academic regulation passed by the Faculty Senate in the Spring:

A student may withdraw from a course without a mark on his record provided he does so WITHIN TEN (10) CALENDAR DAYS after the first day of classes. A course dropped after this period (during which a new course may also be added to the schedule) will receive a mark of F and will be recorded WF—"withdrew failing." This grade will be computed in the quality point average.

An important academic regula-tion concerning course withdrawal was passed by the Faculty Sen-ate last Spring.

The rule stipulates that a student may withdraw from a course without a mark on his record provided he does so within ten calendar days after the first day of classes. Dr. McCune explained that the University figures are based on bona fide requests for admission involving the submission of comfilled out application to the University regispletely trar. General inquiries about admission to the University are much greater in number, but these are not considered as official applications.

Dr. McCune said that of the more than 6,000 applicants, 2,886 were accepted for entrance as freshmen. Of this number 1750 will actually be admitted in the fall. fall.

It was pointed out that colleges always accept more than they can admit because potential entrants invariably apply to a number of other schools and are free to choose any one which accepts them. Admissions officers find that they must therefore accept more than their institutions can accommodate, going on the assumption that a certain percentage of those accepted will enter other schools. There are also some who find they cannot enter because of financial difficulties.

In addition to the 2,886 applicants accepted, 950 other secondary school graduates were placed on the waiting list. Additional applications this year included 643 from students seeking to transfer from other institutions. This figure was approximately the same as last year's.

University officials said that

University officials said that no application forms were out after May 1, though were numerous requests for them. It was pointed out that since there were so many appli-cants prior to that date, admissions officers could not encour-age late applicants in any way and were forced to tell the latter no further applications could be processed.

EXPANSION OF INTRAMURALS

Increased Participation Of Dorms To Highlight Drive

It is the purpose of the Intra-murals Department at the Uni-versity of Massachusetts to provide a broad pattern of org ized recreational activities to tract the leisure time pursuits of the student body.

One major goal of the Physical Education Department for this year is to expand the Intrasports program on campus.

As Provost Shannon McCune puts it: "A student's life at the University can be devoted solely to intellectual pursuits, but the result may be a warped rather than a full life. Therefore, students are urged to take part in ... the intramural program."
New Intramural Program

In line with this policy, Mr. astin L. Cobb, Director of Intrainurals, has devised a new program for the increased par-ticipation in intramurals of dormitories and independent teams.

According to Coach Cobb, due to the efforts of the IFC and because of the sense of purpose that pervades fraternity life, there always is a fine host of fraternity teams in intramurals.

Dormitories can and should have a purpose and a unity similar to that of the fraternities. Because of the relatively small percentage of male students in fraternities, the key to the en-joyment of life on campus is the development of "esprit de corps" in the dorms.

It is also Coach Cobb's belief that identity with the dorms similar to the identity of broth ers to their fraternities, is the key to the disciplinary problem on campus. The denial of certain varied activities to students and the pressure upon students to behave requires an outlet for the energies of the students. This outlet could be found in intra-

The aim of the Department of Intramurals is ultimately to have 40 to 50 per cent of the male student body participating in the activities.

There are two ways to realize There are two ways to realize this aim: either by increasing the opportunities to participate, or by increasing the activities in which to participate. Intramural Athletic Council

The council is composed of (1) The Director of Intramurals (Coach Cobb), (2) The Senior Supervisor or Chair-man (Ben Fernandez), (3) The Junior Supervisor (Charlie La-Pier), (4) Sophomore Supervisor (to be named), (5) The IFC Athletic Chairman (Dick Eger), (6) A Dormitory representative chosen by the Dean of Men, and (7) The Intramural Editor of the Collegian.

This council shall interpret and enforce the rules, make additions and changes when necessary, rule on protests, develop a system of appropriate awards addition to the Council, l new sports are being zed on the intramural Besides the traditional organized team sports of touch football, basketball, and softball, it is hoped that this year volleyball, lacrosse, swimming, and the individual sports of weight lifting, wrestling and tennis can be added to the intramural roster. The number of sports played depends entirely upon student interest and participation in intramurals.

New Point System

To increase this student in-terest, an elaborate point system has been set up. This point system is distinctly separate rays been set up. In point system is distinctly separate from the IFC point system and applies to all teams playing in intramurals, whether they be dorm, fraternity, or independent.

Victories in the various sports ould earn points throughout the year. At the end of the year, whichever dorm, fraternity, or independent team had garnered most points would be awarded a trophy, to be called the Stephen Davis Award.

This then is the ultimate objective of the expanded program. The Davis trophy is a beautiful one and a proud addition to the trophy room of any dorm

But in order to give the trophy the prestige it deserves, there must be increased participation in intramural sports. The frater-nities have always been strong in intramurals, but now the dorms must join in.

In order to do that, the dorms must elect able and sincere athletic chairmen who will organize the various teams and cowith the Intramural Athletic Council.

Also needed are officials. Anyone wishing to apply for a position officiating any of the sports, should apply to Mr. Cobb in Room 10A of the Cage. This year and following years can be more enjoyable to every one by increasing intramural activities. It is up to you, the students, to accomplish that in-

Earl Lorden, coach of the Red-men baseball squad, can boast of one big leaguer from his 1960 roster, that man being the top hurler of last year's team, Gerry Glynn, Gerry is now pitching class AA ball for Houston, a Milwaukee Braves' farm team in the Texas League.

Although he had a little trouble getting started, he's now holding his own and pitching good ball.

Things aren't looking as bright for Chuck Studley's eleven, who scrimmaged at Cornell last v nd. Both John Burgess and Dick Eger are down with the flu and are visiting in the UMass infir-mary. However, they should be back in action shortly.

More serious is the shoulder separation suffered by the UMass all-conference halfback, Tom Delnickas. Tom was a major factor in Coach Studley's football hopes, and probably won't see action for the first few games of the season.

Jimmy Hickman and Pete Schindler, also outstanding backs for the Redmen, will not be with us this year, Schindler having transferred to AIC and Hickman having had scholastic troubles.

With these three men absent from the Redmen backfield Coach Studley will have his work cut out for him in this, his first year at the UMie helm.

The defeat spoiled the night for Boston fans, who were witnessing the long awaited return of pro football to Boston. The of pro football to Boston. The loss served to remind everyone that the AFL race is going to be a tight one, and that pre-season forecasts could be very

The Boston Bruins opened practice sessions last Wednesday, with only 30 players present. It's the smallest turnout in history for Coach Milt Schmidt, who promises that there will be few changes in the team except with relation to the standings.

Senator Flanders Inaugurates Political Discussion

Former Senator Ralph Flanders (R-Vt.) made his first classroom appearance yesterday, in Machmer Hall. He is the first one to appear here in the Ford Foundation's $80,000 pro-gram offering politicans as classroom instructors, and weekly discussion sessions for the entire sturent body.

Senator Flanders' Visit Is A Mark Of Achievement

The University is quite fortunate to have former Vermont Senator Ralph Flanders on campus discussing the presidential election campaign. His many years as a public administrator under Roosevelt and as a Senator for twelve years should enable him to give the students in the Government 93 class and the campus at large some very interesting insights into behind-the-scenes politics.

More significant than Mr. Flanders' appearances, however, is the fact that the Ford Foundation was willing to give the school a grant in excess of $80,000. for a program

Massachusetts is the second school to receive such a grant from the Foundation, Rutgers University being the the first. The award is an indication of how far the University has come in raising its educational standards. It is a recognition of the outstanding government department we have. Certainly the head of the department, Prof. John S. Harris, is to be congratulated for the job he has done.

Attracting the interest of such a large organization takes more than an outstanding department. It takes wellknown, qualified administrators, such as Provost Shannon McCune. It was he who attracted the Ford Foundation's interest by planning such a program. Only after Mr. McCune had arranged to have the senator come here did the Foundation decide to award the grant. We owe our deepest thanks to the provost for a job well done.

The Provost Remains

...For Now

Everybody should know by now that we have a new University President, and, from first appearances, a very qualified President. Everybody also knows that Provost Shannon McCune, who was backed by the Collegian last year as the best man for the job, is not President.

Mr. McCune withdrew his candidacy on August 17 for the post, and for a while it appeared as though he had decided to take another post. Fortunately for the university, this is not the case, at least for the time being

He has let it unofficially be known that he does not plan to accept another position until at least February, probably until June.

Just as we have appreciated the fine work he has done as provost and acting president, we also appreciate the loyalty he shows in turning down a number of attractive offers at other schools to remain one more year as the number two man.

Probably the most popular administrator this school will ever see, he will continue to handle all the jobs involved in running the University. Most important, however, is the fact that he will be available to break in the new president.

GALS, EVERYWHERE BUT THE KITCHEN SINK

The rooming situation in the girls' dormitories this semester-is very interesting. In Knowlton, for instance, three or four freshmen are living in the commuters' room. In Crabtree the utility room is useful in more than one way. It sleeps freshmen. In Mary Lyon the gals must have some difficulty using their kitchenette; some girls are rooming in it. As of now there are no girls rooming in the date rooms or in the jons.

Fortunately for the girls in these dormitories this situation is expected to be relieved in two or three days. Miss Curtis, Dean of Women, and Miss Gonon, Assistant Dean of Women, are doing their best to remedy it. There are still very many girls in triples, however. They will have to wait until a sufficient number of students flunk out and thus provide additional rooming space. S.W.M.

"The Future of Western Civilization and of the free world, as well as the fate of peace, depend to a large extent upon the vigour, determination and wisdom of American policy in the economic, political and defense fields. This is an almost crushing burden.

"Since this overpowering responsibility involves much more than the fate of America, 'others' whose fate is involved have in trying to 'see' America every right to express their opinion. I will therefore make six brief remarks.

(1) I do not believe America is awakened enough to the great dangers of the moment. It is not a simple thing that Communism has in forty years expanded to dominate practically one-third of the world and is still expanding.

(2) I find a most disturbing sense of ease, com-fort and complacency. Material prosperity appears to have softened up the moral nerve.

(3) It does not seem to me that the unity of purpose and policy between America and her allies and friends is firm or deep enough.

(4) I do not understand how the wonderful science and technology of America has been caught napping by Soviet science and technology beating the West in rocket and missile development, nor why much greater efforts are not deployed to catch up with and surpass that development. It is now seven-teen months since the first sputnik and practically every other month the Soviet Union jumps a new xtraordinary feat upon the world.

(5) I believe both for her security and for her conomic prosperity America should develop a much older policy for helping the underdeveloped coun-

With lifted brows and sharp, inquiring eyes the shmen come upon the campus. Under a sea of nnies they converge in the Hatch, eagerly anticipating their engraved champagne glasses purchased at the SU bookstore filled to the purchased at the SU bookstore filled to the brim with champagne. But do not tell me that the thoughts of freshmen are frivolous. Certainly the embroidered "stern pillow" will come before the philosophy text, but we must not be too harsh on these young scholars. Perhaps the seed of intellectuality has lain dormant through the summer and merely awaits the stimulus of "university atmosphere."

"They all walk with such an excitingly springy step," says one professor to a colleague who re-plies, "These are undoubtedly the smartest young group of freshmen that I've ever encountered."

Can it be true that these entering freshmen are an omen? Perhaps the intellectual climate will now reverberate electrically! Perhaps these new students will give us a new and vibrant academic kick, thrusting this university into a somewhat greater standing and national prominence.

Perhaps ... but wait. The brows that were high are lowering. Those sharp eyes are clouded and hazy. Those once vibrant strides are now slow, laboring paces. The academic hopes and aspirations seem now to be subordinate to a weary, grinding out paces. The now to be of curricula.

"I don't have time to run for the Student Senate." "Who's got the time to work on the Collegian?"
But for a small, hard core, intellectual vibrance goes a-glimmering. And the campus comfortably settles down to a deep, submissive sleep.

Maurice Mitchell, president of E.B.F., said in an interview that the teaching machines are more accurately called self-instruction

But do they teach as well as a teacher? How do they work?

"During the school year that ended in June," Mitchell said, "a class of 34 eighth grade pupils in a Roanoke school were given beginning high school algebra, a course ordinarily offered in the ninth grade.

"The teaching was done by machines. The class finished the year-long course in half the usual time, with the students showing an excellent grasp of the material covered as indicated national examination

No lectures, classroom demonstration, textbooks or home work were used."

Mitchell said that in addition taking the standard nationwide achievement test in algebra students took a test the noke teachers themselves devised. They passed the second test with excellent results also. Similar experiments, are un-

"Speedier progress through the years of mathematics and language study on the part of the student and a dramatic extension of the capabilities of the classroom teacher are expected to be the first and most significant re-sult of the widespread introduc-tion of teaching machines,"

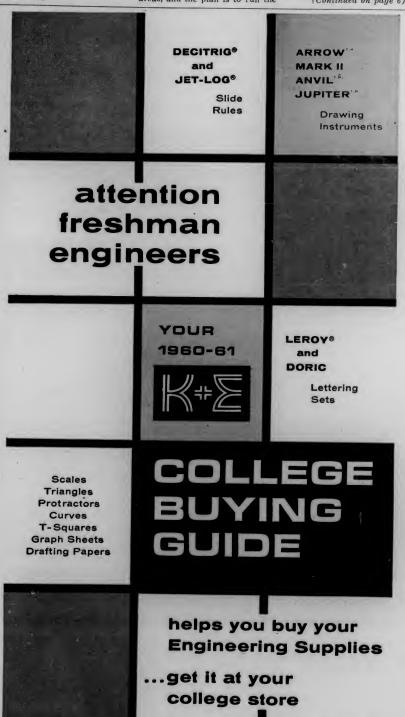

Mitchell said.

"Since the burden of the teaching is done by the machines and the student himself, the teacher is free to deal with individual students, and an enlargement of class size in these subjects seems entirely possible.

"Classes of 100-150 students, supervised by a competent teacher while they move through the process of self-instruction, are believed to be entirely feasible.

Greenbaum Stresses Academic Excellence

On Friday morning, September 9, 1960, Howard Shainheit open-ed the academic meeting by reading a selection from the S.W.A.P. Conference Synopsis. He par-ticularly stressed the statement ticularly stressed the statement concerning the lack of initiative among the students for scholastic achievement, and the lack of awareness of the University's honor societies. An Honors Colloquium, formed this year by Dr. Louis Simpson Greenbaum, was next discussed, and the meeting was turned over to Dr. Greenbaum, who elaborated on his baum, who elaborated on his coming plans for the success of His main idea was to keep students alert regarding "academic excellence" by informal colloquia. Carefully selected students representing various departments on campus were invited by Dr. Greenbaum to participate in the Honors Colloquium, which consists of four small groups comprised of ten men and women, prised of ten men and women, each group presided over by two professors. Such themes as probing into the depths of tragedy will be developed this year. Dr. Greenbaum feels, however, that some of the most essential problems to be considered are general problems, such as man, money, etc. This new program will begin in September. It is hoped that every potential honor stu-dent may have a chance of join-ing the colloquium and meeting his own peers. In order for this be a true success, there must be (1) eager participants chosen by their scholastic achievements, and 2) the colloquium must offer credit points. Dr. Greenbaum firmly believes that the Honor Colloquium would be the most important accomplishment at the University. He considers education a training of the mind; in other words, the ability to intelligently discuss social standards, politics, etc. Subject matter soon vanishes, but the colloquium would train the mind on its own terms—its own speed, requirements, and demands. It was suggested that the professors inimportant accomplishment at the gested that the professors in-volved in the colloquium should attend dormitory teas in order to arouse interest among the student body.

Soccer Squad Lacks Halfbacks As Coach Briggs Greets Seven Returning Lettermen This Week

With the football season just a touchdown away you know that its cousin, soccer, can't be far behind.

Coach Larry Briggs held his first workout Tuesday, with about eighteen men participating, the rest being delayed in the doctor's office getting their physicals.

Coach Briggs figures this is about half his squad and already he could see signs of the spirit and morale that go far in pro-ducing a winning team.

Seven Lettermen

Seven returning lettermen would tend to discourage new-comers. On the contrary, Coach Briggs reports that virtually every position on the team is open.

The returning lettermen include co-captains Hulip and Psilaukis.

Coach Briggs rates Hulip an almost certain starter at one of the fullback positions. Bill Hawes, Charley Repata, Bow Weeks, Nicholas Bazos, and Butch Worsh round out the list of those sporting a letter.

The halfback positions which constitute the nucleus of any team, are the big holes presently causing coach Briggs his most concern. These vital positions require the most conditioning and stamina.

Needs Scorer

Another important man the Redmen soccer team has lacked for the past four or five years is a big scorer: a person who can be counted on to put that ball in the nets when properly set up. If coach Briggs can find this precious gem he will go far in bettering last year's 2-8 record.

Another important position the coach has to fill is perhaps the hardest and the least rewarding and that is the manager. Anyone would like to earn a soccer letter and at the same time gain a lot of self-satisfaction should see coach Briggs any time after 3:30 down on the soccer field, by

In a preliminary warm-up prior to their first game with Coast Guard Sept. 24, the team will scrimmage a group made up of Alumni, at three o'clock, Saturday, on the soccer field.

Bands of Americans Work On Vacation to Help Others

By PATRICIA CONNOR United Press International

Nearly 200 young Americans are "vacationing" this summer by building roads, churches and international relations.

The Americans joined a thousand youths of other countries at volunteer work camps sponsored by the World Council of Churches in 31 countries.

Working with boys and girls of other tongues and faiths, they'll plant trees, build roads, paint houses, care for refugee children and other needed services from Africa to Sweden. Besides contributing their time and muscle, they also pay their living expenses and transportation.

The one-month camps give buths "the opportunity to express their sense of responsibility by working with their hands to meet human need," the council explained. Over 10,000 have taken part since the program started in 1947.

For the first time four African countries are part of the camping grounds veloping an outdoor recreation area and building a road at Bulawayo, Southern Rhodesia.

Other students a long way from hometown jobs are joining in renovating slum buildings in Gothenburg, Sweden; building a water reservoir dam on Kythera Island, Greece, and reconstruct-ing typhoon-damaged areas in Nagoya, Japan.

Ninety-one of the Americans have signed up to donate their talent to projects in the United States—in Hawaii, Chicago, New York, St. Louis, Indianapolis and New Windsor, Md. Their work ranges from a self-help housing program in Indianapolis to says. program in Indianapolis to service in a St. Louis mental hospital.

Vacationing students who ordinarily might don a soda-jerker's cap for the summer instead are joining a road building crew in a village near Accra. Ghana. Others are turning their time to improving the water system of a village near Nairobi, Kenya; developing an outdoor recreation.

The volunteers, all between 19 and 30 and representing Protestant, Anglican and Orthodox religions, not only will build with materials but with growing gions, not only will bund und materials but with growing knowledge of each other.

Dictionary Editor Is Bombarded by Word Coiners

CLEVELAND (UPI) — David Guralnik probably is bombarded with more words than any other man in the country.

Guralnik is dictionary editor for the World Publishing Co. Words are his business. The business in new words is particularly brisk.

People often write to the editor enclosing a word they have made up, offering to sell it, and promising a definition when they get a check. Some of the words are ingenious and some even needed.

For the most part, it's no sale. One woman recently offered the word "hirs" for consideration. She pointed out there is no pronoun in the English language to take care of the "his or hers" situation. No sale.

And there was no sale either for the word "hydronics" although it filled a need and was included in a college edition dictionary. The word was thought up and offered by makers of heating and cooling systems to describe what they are up to.

Disc jockeys held a convention a few years ago, raised an indignant cry over their titles and thought up the word "musicasters" to replace it. Dictionary editors were bombarded by press agents, but nothing happened because the industry itself and everyone else continued to use "disc jockeys."

All of which illustrates a point

All of which illustrates a point often made by Guralnik:

Dictionary editors follow usage, don't initiate it.

Sigma Phi Epsilon Holds Open House This Sunday

Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity, 9 Chestnut St., will hold an open house 3 to 5 p.m. Sunday in their new $105,000 house, it was an-nounced recently by President John A. Mitchell.

-VETERAN-

All veteran students in training under Public Law 550 must come at once to the Placement Office, South College, to fill out a V.A. enrollment form if this was not done at registration time.

Forty-two brothers are now living in the house, which was started last May, and has a seating capacity of 85.

Mitchell said a number of members of the faculty and ad-ministration as well as all sorority members had been invited, and that all students with the exception of male freshmen students are invited to attend. Male frosh are prohibited by Interfraternity Council regulations from entering any fraternity house un-til next semester.

Opening Kickoff

The opening of another football season is at hand and the campus is anxiously awaiting the debut of Head Coach Charles Studley.

Coach Studley has worked long and hard in his effort to bring UMass a winning football team. His introduction of spring football practices did not meet with the satisfaction of all persons, yet these practices are held by all of our opponents and are a necessary step on the road to a successful team.

When the players reported for pre-season sessions in August, Studley again found himself beset with problems. He found that his starting fullback would be out of action all season due to an injury; that his starting halfbacks had left school; and that other leading candidates would not be reporting.

There was one bright spot, however. Those players that did return were in good shape. So Studley took what he had and made the most of it. He worked the team and himself rigorously and the product of his work will be witnessed tomorrow and in the coming season.

While Coach Studley and the new Redmen have given us reason to hope for better things this season, we should be careful not to place our hopes too high. A new team cannot be fashioned overnight. In most cases it takes three or four years to transform a losing team into a winning one. We sincerely hope and have good cause to believe that this season will be a winning one for UMass. But we cannot expect miracles. It is better for us to realize our capabilities now and merely hope for improvement than to prepare for impossible feats only to experience a big letdown.

Flit In Our Food?

To the Editor:

I have read your paper and I think you should be commended for it. It is a good one. I also realize that it is a student paper, and probably you are not at all interested in some fogy on the faculty trying to get in his two cents worth.

Anyway, what I was about to say was, I am pleased that you saw fit to use "The Good Teacher" by Mark Van Doren in your lead spot on the editorial page. I agree with Prof. Van Doren almost all the way, and I have already used your paper in my classes. So, thanks.

Donald E. Hall Asst. Prof. of Education

P.S.—I came on campus August 22 in order to get my courses set up and squared away. I often ate at the Hatch; it was handy and there was always lots of company. Not many students, but about two million files. Now there are millions of each. Can't your paper bring some pressure to bear on this problem and get rid of them? The flies, I mean.

D.E.H.

Editor's Note:

Dear Mr. Hall:

Boy! We sure wish to thank you for this comment ... a great boost to our ego. Sorry you're having trouble with the flies. Maybe Mr. Russell W. Colvin, Student Union Foods Manager, will take note and try to remedy this pesty problem with a Flit gun. About the millions of students, though—we feel this will have to be referred to the freshmen selection section of the campus.

The Iconoclast

by JIM TRELEASE '63

With our summer romances, dreams, addictions, and jobs having gone the way of the four winds, we must now settle down to the task remaining before us—"striving to sustain excellence," as our dearly departed, late President so nobly decreed as our goal ... and here you thought people didn't partake of the forbidden fluid on this campus. Well, that just goes to show you that it is harder for a rich man to enter the kingdom of reality than for a white man to enter the Congo.

With this opening column, perhaps we could postpone our sustenance and review the past summer politically a bit. The Democratic convention opened with accusations by Harry Truman that Jack was too young for the nomination, after which Kennedy retaliated by naming great men in history who achieved fame at an early age: Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Leopold and Loeb, Bob Strom, Dondi and Billy Burkhardt (although not necessarily in that order.)

At about that time, Ike's trip to Japan was cancelled because demonstrations made it evident that Dr. Shannon McCune (Kishi's Jim Haggerty) would not be able to control his followers. Two weeks later college students from all over the U.S.A. rioted at Newport, the scene of the annual jazz festival. While newspapers played it up as an exhibition of our youth's insecurities and jazz bawdiness, we all know that the affair was a demonstration against Ike and his intended visit to Newport the following week.

Yes, it's been a busy summer for college students. But somehow whenever I picked up the newspaper and read of student riots in Japan, Newport, Korea, Turkey and Cuba, I couldn't help but feel a certain sensation of "belonging." Today, more than ever before, "to belong" is a very important thing. Look about you and observe the bewilderment in the faces of those people wandering in search of where they "belong" . . . like Eleanor Roosevelt was doing at the Democratic convention.

The Democratic convention went off on schedule but left several questions unanswered. Can Frank Sinatra tear himself away from the nation's parking lot attendants in order to accept an ambassadorship to the Vatican? If so, will Sammy Davis be appointed ambassador to Sweden in order to live with May's folks? Speaking of May and Sammy, the bookies in Las Vegas have released the odds as 9-5 that the kid will be polka-dot.

At the Republican convention, President Eisenhower had to be introduced to the assembly ... which gives you an idea of how little time he has spent in the U.S. this past year. For instance, when Nixon introduced Goldwater to Ike, the senator concluded the conversation with the words, "Well, it's been nice meeting you ... ah, er ... fella. Look me up if you ever get to Washington, huh?"

When LIFE and the New York TIMES reported the Congo killings, raping, thievery, and other heinous crimes to the world, the U.S. cringed at the thought of such events. But I think we are too opinionated; after all, a fella has to have some kind of hobby. We in the States paint by numbers and they kill by numbers. While Ike expressed concern over the Congo situation when he heard about it THE DAY BEFORE YESTERDAY, Nixon voiced a note of optimism when he said, "As long as it doesn't interfere with the Phantom's Olympics ..."

And now with the summer behind us, we at the University may look forward to the future ... to the next few days when we'll once again have a "great white father" for the White House on Baker Hill. For those frosh among you who are interested in extra-curricular activities, you might try dropping by the Collegian office. Why just the other day two Smith College professors wandered into the office looking for a position on our photography department. But we lost their services in the end; seems the Thursday night movie committee scooped them up instead.

ANOTHER SPACE RACE

Aesop Revisited

by JUDY DICKSTEIN '63

Once upon a time, there was a king who, through some irony of fate, was born with a mentality below that of normal. He had to be constantly accompanied by his courtiers and advisers lest he make some disastrous proclamation or otherwise bring calamity to his country. Such a state of affairs continued for many years, until one day the elders of the court decided that something had to be done at once to remedy the situation.

They pondered long and hard, until at last the most erudite of them struck upon the idea to enlist the aid of a sorcerer—a weaver of spells. The old magician was brought to the court and agreed to find a cure for this pitiful monarch who could not even make and execute his own decisions.

At last the potion was prepared and introduced into the goblet of wine which followed the ruler's evening meal. The courtiers retired and waited for the morn to witness the miraculous cure, for indeed a monarch incapable of making the simplest decision was of no value to the land.

Morn finally came, and the king arose a new man—FULL OF DECISIONS OF HIS OWN! His first official act was to dismiss his entire council of advisers; indeed he could now think for himself! For, in their haste, the elders had given their king an overdose of the miraculous potion, and OVER-COMPENSATION for his faults was the result.

Moral: An overcompensated fault often leads merely to another fault.

A ludicrous tale, you say, and rather corny at that. But see the analogy:

Great care is taken that students not place extracurricular work before their studies; students have been warned over and over as to the dangers of such a system. And, in their eagerness to avoid this deplorable condition, the students, by analogy, overcompensated . . . and deserted the University organizations completely,—or so it would seem from the dire need for help on the staffs of this campus' major organizations.

WMUA, for example, at present has its studios manned by a small crew of devoted station officers. The Collegian, also desperate for staff workers, has to print items such as this from lack of more capable and talented writers. Other major organizations, too, are suffering from the present lack of narticination.

Contrary to popular opinion, the major offenders are not the freshmen; many of them are already putting in more work than their study schedules should allow. The student body as a whole, members of all four classes, are exhibiting apathy toward their own campus organizations.

We expect our newspaper to be delivered regularly to our dormitories; we expect the radio station to be broadcasting when we turn on our sets; we expect to receive our copy of the Index each spring—yet no one is willing to assume the responsibility of writing a newspaper, running a radio station, or compiling a yearbook!

There's no excuse for such a lack of participation; campus groups belong to all of us. So don't hesitate another day; select your service and enlist. Metawampe needs YOU!

LAST YEAR'S REDMEN SQUAD, WHICH TRAILED MAINE

throughout most of the game at Alumni Field, rallied for eight points in the third quarter and thirteen more in the final frame to clinch a UMass victory against the favored Bears.

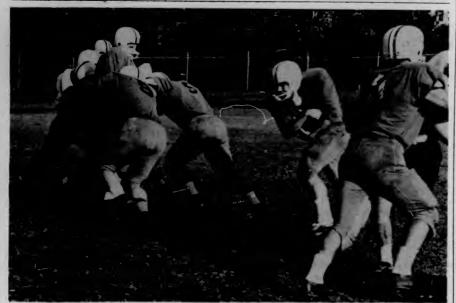

The end of the first half seemed to indicate a repeat performance of other UMass elevens. Penalties and bad breaks gave the men from Orono a seven point lead at the end of the first half, lead with two leaves the table of the control of the con a lead which was later stretched to 16-0, But in the exciting fin-ish it was a different story.

Coach Chuck Studley has made many changes in the Redmen offensive and defensive alignments, and, with eleven lettermen returning for Maine, it promises to be a hard fought game. With John McCormick at the helm for the tribe, and an experienced line backing him up, the Massmen can be expected to exhibit a strong offensive game. Coach Studley is apprehensive about his defense, an apprehension which will meet its test tomorrow

SPORTSENSE

That was the headline on the front page of this paper, Monday, September 21, 1959. Rallying for 21 points in the last half to overcome the Bears' 16 point lead at halftime, the Massachusetts Redmen turned an apparent defeat into a glorious victory.

There are high hopes among Coach Studley's crew that the Redmen will again turn the tables on the men from Orono. Although UMass is considered the underdog by Dell Sports previews, it is hard to accept this prediction.

Twenty lettermen will be back in action this year for the Mass-men who, although finishing with a 3-5-1 record last year, placed second in the Yankee conference to Maine's fourth.

Quest For Knowledge Spurs Educational TV On To Bigger Gains

by HARRY MILLICAN United Press International

NEW YORK (UPI)—To many adults, educational television is are and appreciated chance to see and hear programs aimed at a mental age above 12.

To others, it is an opportunity to do post-graduate studies or to mend the gaps in a fragmentary education.

To increasing numbers of school and college-age youngsters it is an actual part of school and campus study, or a chance to obtain credit at home.

administrators of over-taxed educational institutions, educational television is offering more and more hope of increased efficiency in using to the utmost the abilities of able teachers.

It can be a partial solution to crowded classrooms, lack of schools

The Federal Communications Commission began authorizing educational television stations in 1952. They now number 50—and 48 are affiliated with a national network, "National Educational Television," known to TV people as "NET," and operated on a non-profit height

NET is not linked by wire for live broadcasts, but its affiliates all receive the same carefully-prepared video tapes on educational subjects to supplement their own projects, some of which, if deemed nationally interesting, are partially financed by NET and go into the exchange.

Through its affiliated stations NET has a potential audience of about 70 million and estimates that some 20 million persons are regular viewers. It has an executive office in New York, but its shipping department and copying facilities are still in Ann Arbor, Mich., where it was born.

NET deals exclusively with educational programs covering science, the humanities, art, drama and public events, leaving classes for school or college credit entirely to the individual stations. It does, owever, distribute such scholastic course tapes between its affiliates on request.

A new organization, the "Learning Resources Institute," with headquarters in New York, has been formed to deal with college courses for credit.

The institute estimates that during the 1958-59 school year, 569

The institute estimates that during the 1908-99 school year, 300 public school systems and 117 colleges and universities in America used television for direct instruction in regular courses involving more than 500,000 school children and 100,000 college students.

Dr. John W. Taylor, former acting director of UNESCO, who is on temporary leave from his present post as director of Chicago's educational station WTTV to get the institute's program organized, said there is no doubt that TV classes are successful, efficient, needed and bound to increase.

"Let's face it," he said in an interview, "there's no doubt about our population explosion. It has happened. It has doubled the number of our students. We simply can't continue to educate by the old methods. We can't afford the old standard of one teacher to each 20 to 25 students.

"We can't get enough qualified teachers and we can't afford to pay them properly. Business and industry, which can afford to pay them, is taking our prospective young teachers away from us. We have got to find a way to increase the productivity of our teachers just as industry did with its workers. "We must completely reorganize our teaching concepts and methods. It has been obvious for the past five or six years that teaching, for lecture and demonstration purposes, is just as good by TV as in the classroom. It is perfectly satisfactory for every subject that is taught by lecture and demonstration.

"One teacher, instead of lecturing or demonstrating to 25 or 30 students, can perform the same task for hundreds simultaneously. The time thus saved can be utilized for discussions, where needed, with small groups of the students, perhaps as few as three or four.

"We have long since tried to give the teacher more time to teach by utilizing teacher's helpers for various tasks including the tedious chore of grading papers or, in the case of small children, helping them on and off with their coats. It certainly doesn't take a university degree to do this. Television is a step farther in the same direc-

The society subsidizes its chapters and offers immeasurable opportunities to its members.

Through its publications, conferences, and meetings, its members are kept abreast of the developments in the field, which includes all phases of engineering. physics, math, chemistry, and to a lesser degree, sociology, geo-logy, psychology and law.

Student members have the op-portunity to win the $1000 ARS Chrysler Corporation Award for the best paper on any subject related to astronautics.

Among the college chapters are MIT, Cal. Tech, Princeton, Oberlin, Michigan State, and Penn. At MIT some of the students did research on the propagation of the flame front by using a motor made from lucite.

The solid forward wall of the 'new look" Redmen did a great job of containing the opponents during most of the afternoon. The UMass gridders also put together a surprisingly strong running attack. This combined with John McCormick's aerial "bombs", resulted in a total 351 yards.

Following a scoreless first quarter, the Amherst boys began to move. After directing his boys into Maine's stamping grounds, McCormick hit Roger Benvenuti on the 16. The junior halfback from Adams then galloped to pay dirt. John Bamberry bisected the uprights to project Massachusetts into a 7-0 lead,

Leeds Hospital Announces Volunteer Training Program

The Leeds Veterans Adminis-tration Hospital in Northampton has announced that the Fall Orientation and Indoctrination course for volunteer workers will be held Sept. 28 and Oct. 5 at

This two session course is re quired by the government for all volunteers serving in the hospi-tal wards. Transportation will be provided for everyone interested, and will leave Skinner Hall at 6:30 P.M.

The purpose of the course is to provide the volunteer with an understanding of the Veterans Administration Volunteer Service (VAVS) program, which includes the fundamental principles and methods of volunteer series. methods of volunteer assistance in the hospital program, policy, functions, and objectives of the

V.A. hospital program.

The UMass VAVS program is sponsored by the Campus Religious Council and the Red Cross. This program involves two nights a month on an assigned ward at the hospital. Qualified volunteers on to the ward as a group and go to the ward as a group and entertain the patients by playing cards, dancing, or simply talk-ing to them. Volunteers with unusual or special talents are al-ways needed, and constitute an important part of the program.

If interested, please sign your name and address at a sign up sheet which will be at the Student Union Lobby Counter starting Wednesday Sept. 21. If you have any questions or desire further information, please contact Norm Sharp at 218 Hills North or at AL 3-9289.

Fraternities — On The Defense?

MOH

Dean of Men Robert S. Hopkins Jr. urged the UMass fraternities to "get off the defensive" at the Wednesday night meeting of the Fraternity Presidents Assembly.

Getting off the defensive is really only a half-way step to the ideal program—an aggressive, imaginative schedule of activities for the school year, is what is needed to revitalize the fraternity system.

Last year's liquor ban forced the fraternities to re-evaluate and change their program from one which was centered around drinking parties of one form or another. Unfortunately, last year's program was unsuccessful in that it failed to keep the brothers at home on weekends, and the fraternities found no matter how hard they tried, only a handful would come to these parties.

It will be quite difficult to overcome these circumstances, but it is desirable and possible if the IFC collectively and the fraternity presidents separately use imagination in planning the events this year.

One of the reasons for brothers losing interest in house parties and get-togethers was that people just naturally get tired of the same faces and conversations.

Perhaps this problem would be solved if weekend festivities were arranged in a manner similar to the highly successful exchange suppers. If two or three fraternities were to ask some of the brothers to attend another frat's party while inviting some of the members of that fraternity to their own party, there would be the new faces, different conversations, and an interesting exchange of ideas.

Perhaps the brothers should invite some of their non-fraternity friends to bring in some new faces.

Certainly the fraternity presidents must use the courage and imagination that brought the chariot races and Louis Armstrong to the UMass campus if they ever hope to regain the top social spotlight, indeed, if a good social program is to exist on the campus at all.

IT'S UP TO US ...

By clearly outclassing Maine Saturday, the UMass football team passed an important test. If the team were to have a chance of winning the Yankee Conference crown, a victory over Maine was vital.

The Redmen passed their test. Now it's up to the fans to pass theirs and support the team by attending the rallies and by turning out en masse to greet the team for its first home game Saturday.

LETTERS

Vox Populi

In representing the University campus and reflecting the opinions of the student body, as well as the faculty and administrators, the Collegian would like to encourage contributions to this "Letters" column. It is hoped that as the academic year progresses and as controversies begin to stir, members of the UMass community will be inspired to add their views—praises or criticisms—for consideration.

Letters to the editor for publication must be signed and contain the author's address. Requests for the use of initials only will be observed. The Collegian reserves the right to edit when necessary.

AN EXPERIMENT

A new experimental course in History 25 has appeared on the University scene. This lecture session consists of 225 students. We have one consolation though. For students who do not benefit from large lecture sections, there will also be ten discussion sessions throughout the course.

Harold W. Cary, professor and head of the history department, has stated that this is an experimental course and seems, so far, to be successful. He added, "This idea of a large lecture session worked well with many History 5 and 6 courses. It should also be given a chance to work well in the American History, History 25, course."

What we the students, want to know is, will we obtain as much benefit from these large lectures as the department does by giving them? We think that a course such as history needs to be discussed more than just having facts thrown out to us.

Still, there are two other sections of History 25 with 30 students each and two honors sections with 20 students each. These sections include discussions. Now, who is to say whether the students in the 30 student sections are more deserving to be in the small discussion groups than the students in the larger section? If special consideration can be given to the honors students why can it not also be given to the less gifted (Mark-Wise) students?

We students feel that special consideration should be given to this problem and if the large lecture session cannot be eliminated, then more discussion sections should be added.

Americans In Russia

More than forty years of ruthless Soviet rule have not squelched the Russian people's capacity for independent thought.

This is the conclusion of Yale University student Charles Neff, who toured the Soviet Union recently with seventeen fellow members of the Yale Russian Chorus. In an article in the May Reader's Digest, Neff tells author, Enno Hobbing that throughout Russia, the young singers encountered people eager to learn about the outside world.

Neff and his friends visited Russia as students rather than singers; thus they had no "official" concerts scheduled. But when ther first impromptu song—delivered in a Leningrad hotel—met with enthusiasm from the Russian listeners, they knew they could safely sing their way through the country.

Lively discussions usually followed their concerts, Neff reports. Peace was the central theme. With surprising frequency the opinions expressed by Russian citizens varied from the "party line." When, for example, some young Communist officials began reciting Party-line slogans, a group of citizens shouted, "Oh, come on, we've heard that before." Russian students attacked Marxism on the same grounds on which it is criticized in the West.

So deep is the Russians' desire for peace, says Neff, that some indicated they would stand up to the Kremlin if it tried to send them into battle. One middle-aged worker declared: "I will never kill a man again—except to shoot the officer who tells me to shoot."

Religion is surprisingly vigorous, Neff says. At least 200 babies were baptized in one day in a Greek Orthodox Church in Leningrad. The youth of the worshippers, mostly young parents who travelled from nearby towns, belied the Soviet claim that only the old cling to religion.

Neff's conclusion: The Soviet people are not about to revolt. They are, however, critical of their rulers—often in a highly vocal way. And significantly, the criticism seems to be increasing.

The article, "To Russia With Music," is condensed from The Lion.

A REVOLUTION AND AN ATTITUDE

by MIKE PALTER '63

Part I

I still remember that Sunday when I watched "Omnibus", a television series which has subsequently left the airwaves. On this particular program, a short and very interesting film was being shown. At first glance, all that one could see was a motley assemblage of young men, most of whom were bearded. Over their shoulders were slung powerful Belgian rifles and some wore military dress.

After about a half-minute of curious inspection by the camera, the sound-track cut in and one could hear the somewhat distorted voice of the Omnibus reporter. He said something about how hard it was to secure this interview and proceeded to explain his exact whereabouts. He went on to tell about a group of mountains in Cuba and more specifically about a few men who were apparently dissatisfied with the existing government of the island nation. He said that these men now constituted a guerilla force which based itself in these mountains.

The reporter then quizzed one of the group (in Spanish) as to who amongst them spoke English. The guerilla pointed to his side and the camera panned around to a rather short, somewhat stout man who had developed a fairly dense beard which, I suspect, made him look older than he actually was.

The reporter then questioned this man, who replied in broken English with long sentences. At regular intervals, he looked questioningly at the reporter to see if the poor English was getting across. I can not say that I remember exactly what he said, but I recall that it consisted of a mass of generalities such as the evils of the existing regime and the need for freedom.

Unaccustomed as my generation is to listening to bearded revolutionaries propounding the virtues of freedom, I viewed this interview as a sort of human circus. And this is exactly how Alistaire Cooke, the host of "Omnibus", viewed it—with tongue in cheek!

As you probably have guessed by now, that bearded revolutionary was Fidel Castro. This man, at the time of that interview, was fighting at the head of a small group of men against a regime that was corrupt, ruthless, and despotic. There existed no doubt in the minds of Castro's men that the Battista regime was a bloodbath, nor does there remain any doubt (even in the United States) that this was so.

SCRAPING THE BOTTOM

The supreme effort on the part of the Commons to muster up a dinner edible to even the connoiseur last Monday petered out by Friday. Perhaps this was also so in the other dining halls. At any rate, Friday evening our limited choice included an inviting creamed asparagus . . . or was it broccoli? We had little to go on besides the bottom of the bottoms in this culinary artifice. Who had the tops?

UM Store Sells Books Cheaper

The University Book Store saves each student $2.00 a year on text books purchased at the Store, according to Manager Augustine J. Ryan.

"The profits," said Mr. Ryan,

The Store does make an average net profit of 6% each year,

The remaining 3% of the net goes back into the Store. Some profit has to be made, said Mr. Ryan, for the Store has "got to grow like the rest of the University."

Your Congressman

What Do You Know About Him? What Does He Know About You?

YOUR spokesmen in Congress - YOUR representaare the two Senators from your state and the Representative from your Congressional district. This is true regardless of whether the incumbent office holders represent the political party to which you belong or an opposing political party. Once Senators or Representatives have been elected they represent all the people of their state or their district no matter which party they are affiliated with.

Your spokesmen in the national government cannot do good job of representing you unless they know and understand your views and you, in turn understand their problems. They need and want the opinions of all their constituents-if they can get them-regardless of party affilia-

WHAT TO WRITE ABOUT

It must be remembered that a Congressman's first obligation is to his constituents. His big problem is to get reelected, and much of his time is taken up with satisfying the demands of those who have sent him to Washington. Their views are always given first place in his thoughts. Accurate and useful information sent to him by a voter in his district is always appreciated. He welcomes hearing from "back home" because it shows him the people know he is alive and are interested in what he is doing. Until we realize our representatives in Congress want and welcome our views and we take the trouble to communicate frequently, our relations in Washington will not be what they should or ought to be. Remember, you don't have to wait until you have a complaint to write to your Senators and Representatives. They're human too, and a pat on the back is appreciated by them as it is by you, and a slap in the face arouses their anger as readily as yours. Don't gripe— WRITE

TEN TIPS ON WRITING YOUR CONGRESSMAN

- 1. Keep your letters as brief as possible
- 2. Tell the essentials about yourself or your business.
- 3. Be forthright: If you're for something, say so. Don't beat around the bush.
- 4. Avoid emotion: Prove your case with facts and figure
- 5. Be reasonable: Seek only possible things.
- 6. Speak for yourself: Use your own stationery and letter
- style.
- 7. Be courteous: Compliment him on a good speech, thank him for a good vote, and rec-ognize his staff, too.
- 8. Request action: Your man is elected to do something.
- 9. Ask for an answer: You've told him where you stand. Ask him where he stands.
- 10. Don't stop with one letter. Keep your Congressman informed of your views on all important legislation.

Spotlight On Sports

by AL BERMAN '62, SPORTS EDITOR

The Boston Patriots won the gins this first game of their careers Saturday night as they edged the New York Titans, 28-24.

The game was won on a fluke play. New York had the ball on its own 10 with only seconds left to play when a pass from center was fumbled. An alert Patriot lineman picked up the loose ball and ambled over the line as the final buzzer sounded to give Boston the win

The Patriots now have a record of 1-1, having lost their opening game to Denver last week.

Pete Runnels of the Red Sox suffering from a double ulcer but plans to finish out the sea son in quest of his first batting title. Runnels, now at .323, leads the rest of the league by 9 points.

Students Plan Sky-Diving Show

PARACHUTIST MOMENTS AFTER LEAVING PLANE

On Wednesday, September 21st, there will be an exhibition 21st, there will be an exhibition sky-diving parachute jump made by three members of the UMass. Parachute Club. Dana Smith (282 jumps), Ellsworth Getchell (242 jumps), and Richard Fillmore (100 jumps) will attempt a double baton pass during a thirty to sixty seconds freefall with orange smoke. The jump is scheduled for 6 P.M., weather permitting. The veteran parachutists will open their multi-colored canopies at 2,000 feet and attempt to land on a predesignated target which will be located near the Student Union pond. In the event of unfavorable weather, the exhibition will be postponed until Thursday evening, September 22nd at 6 p.m.

The purpose of the jump is to advertise the Parachute Club's first meeting of the new semester which will be held at 7 P.M. on Wednesday, September 21st in the Barnstable and Franklin Rooms of the Student Union. Both old and new prospects are invited to attend. Plans for club activities will be outlined.

Last year the club made a total of 74 parachute jumps, mostly static line jumps (automatic openings) from 2500 feet. The club's activities oscillated be-tween Orange and Mansfield Airports. The club's objectives are to train members to make safe, supervised sport jumps, to fami-liarize them with methods of parachute rigging, and ultimate-ly to train them to advanced free-fall techniques.

Do-It-Yourself Education Advocated By Professor

Thus, they would be encouraged responsibility for the acquisition of their education."

He pointed out that many educators want students to have individual and group responsibility in student government and the social areas, and in choice of courses; but that these same educators demand "prescribed reactions, stereotyped methods and limited content in what they call the last stronghold of freedom, the classroom."

Dr. Murray suggested decreasing the number of courses taken by the student, eliminating much of the time spent in class and requiring that all courses on a student's program be interrelated. This, he said, would make possible greater depth in breadth in the educational experience.

"The best qualified students and faculty could pursue excellence to the extent of their capabilities," he added, "and all other students and faculty would have the freedom and opportunity to pursue their interests in programs full of individual potentialities."

Herb Bello '61, president, S.U. Planning Council, started the program by introducing Coach Studley and his staff.

Complete movies of Saturday's opening victory over Maine were then shown. Richard Anderson, backfield coach of the Redmen, narrated the film.

The films clearly indicated that Maine's final score was illegal.

After taking Jack Conway's long punt on his own 20 yard line, Wayne Champeon fumbled the ball. While attempting to retrieve the pigskin the speedy halfback kicked it toward the sidelines where he picked it up and raced all the way to paydirt.

Since the ball was clearly kicked, the run should have been nullified. This play, although important at the time, never affected the final outcome.

Line coach Chet Gladchuck ended the program with an advance scouting report on AIC, the next opponent for the Redmen. This report was very limited, however, since the Springfield club hasn't played a regular game this season.

It is known, though, that AIC has a heavy, fast line. Quarter-back Dick Glogowski holds the key to the Aces football future. The big sophomore seems to be making the switch gracefully from halfback to the signal-calling job.

When asked if he was planning to save any plays for Harvard and Connecticut, Studley responded that he is planning to beat (Continued on page 5)

Invitation -To The Faculty

This year the Collegian is particularly interested in achieving a high readership among the faculty, because it is important to have a medium for the exchange of ideas between students and teachers.

In line with this goal, the newspaper is offering subscriptions to the faculty and administration for $2.00 per year delivered on campus. Also, we will deliver the paper on the day of publication to any building in which there are fifteen or more subscribers. This is intended to eliminate the problem of offering the faculty stale news.

We sincerely hope that every teacher and administrator will recognize the value of the Collegian as a principal means of working out some of the problems in the campus community and will take advantage of this

by MIKE PALTER '63 _

Part II

It is now significant to recall that the original object of Castro and his men was to oust the Battista regime . . . and this only! There was not the merest hint of "anti-Yankeeism". So now we see that it is even more important to find out just why the latter situation developed.

To ascertain this, it is necessary to confront certain basic ques

What should be the action of a successful revolution against those what should be the action of a successful revolution against those institutions which either actively or passively supported a previously corrupt government? More specifically, should the American, British, and other corporations be called to answer for the injustices of a regime perpetuated either actively or passively by these very corporations? I do not mean to imply here that Texaco gave financial backing to the Battista regime nor do I mean to imply that any collusion took place between the corporations and the Battista government. (Certainly an American oil or sugar refinery would not bargain with a despot even if this were to result in various financial concessions. Certainly Texaco puts the freedom of the people before the mere dollars and cents in dividends!)

Communist Leanings

Communist Leanings
Well, as we all know now the revolution materialized. Battista hauled off as much money as he could and Castro set up a government containing several questionable (by Western standards) people.
Then it seemed that the roof fell in Castro began expropriating, and

Then it seemed that the roof fell in Castro began expropriating, and expropriating, and expropriating.

The Cuban People who had been without land for years were the recipients of the dole. The factories which had once belonged to outside interests were taken over by the new government. Whether those who had formerly owned these factories received sufficient reimbursement was, and still is, a matter of conjecture. It was a sort of Communistic fairy-tale in miniature! Che Che Guevera, the new economic minister of the young government, had Marxist leanings, it was learned.

From these facts it was obvious that Castro was a communist and no doubt, in his youth, had planned a fourth Nationale. He was rather suspicious-looking anyway, with those sparkling eyes in contrast with that wooly-black beard. To make things worse, when he spoke he always moved his hands around like Hitler and people noticed this. I guess they didn't see much of Roosevelt!

And to this was added the commentary of those modern-day, de-

And to this was added the commentary of those modern-day, deliciously handsome newsmen. They said that at the start Castro was alright but now he had gone too far. It sounded like a scenario of the French Revolution! (I've often wondered what Louis Lyons thinks of these suave, modern-day news analysts!) And even such liberal papers as the Washington Post and the N.Y. Times echoed these sentiments.

At any rate, the initial revolution passed and although we found selves with much less property, we at least knew that there existed haps a shade more freedom on the island. I'm sure that this thought was a consolation to many stockholders. But we must remember this: at that stage there were still no placards saying "Yankee, go home!" There still remained a chance to influence Castro and Cuba to our way of thinking. Or perhaps it was too late. No one knows.

"Economic Aggression"

At this time, some of our southern Senators, well known for their democratic ideals, along with other conscientious overseers of our nation began talking about cutting the sugar quota. Cuba said that this constituted "conscientions overseers of our nation began talking about cutting the sugar quota. Cuba said that this constituted "economic aggression," but the O.A.S. disagreed. (This term "economic aggression" is constituted "economic aggression," but the O.A.S. disagreed. (This term "economic aggression" is somewhat general and consequently difficult to discuss in political circles where one side thinks on one plane and the other, on another.)

It is now clear however that the whole situation was initiated by the wholesale expropriation of foreign investment in Cuba. And thus, we come back to my original question:

Is an institution which supports, either actively or passively, a corrupt government liable to seizure in the event of revolution?

One need not be unnecessarily idealistic to answer this.

The bi-monthly Evergreen Review, No. 11, is a testimony to beatdom. The article "Kerouac's Sound" by Warren Tallman is for the squares, the uninitiated, a guide for digging this literature. The literature, despite its strangeness and obscurity, or perhaps because of it, is extremely exciting and fascinating. Tallman says: "To be Beat is to let your life come tumbling down into a humpty-dumpty heap, and with it into down into a numpty-dumpty neap, and with it into the same heap, the humpty-dumpty meanings which language attempts to sustain." Kerouac's words tumble out humpty-dumpty style in sentences two and three pages long. earth," and "gomezing along the road." This, like abstract art, creates impressions and moods first, concrete ideas secondly, if at all.

Much fun is made of beat writing. This is normal; if it isn't understood, if it isn't familiar, people poke fun at it. I suggest that they, the beats, are impossible to entirely understand, because they are too close to their insides and are rejecting the refinements, as well as the traditions and conventions of centuries of conformity.

They speak as they think, neglecting to paste their humpty-dumpty thoughts and feelings into nice, smooth hard-boiled eggs.

This Demi-Paradise, by Margaret Halsey (Sime A Schuster): In previous books Miss Halsey's preoccupation with world issues ("With Malice Toward Some" for instance) tended to obscure the fact that she is a suburbanite. The American Legion said no. In exploring this special controversy, Miss Halsey manages to drop her own variety of blockbuster on some outcity institutions like the supermarket (Plethora, Inc.) and the liberal church (St. Euphoria-in-the-Warld) Miss Halsey has mellowed somewhat but World). Miss Halsey has mellowed somewhat but her wit is still sharp. This is a very funny book and in a way a devastatingly true one

C.A. Picnic Held Sunday For Frosh

by MARGE BOUVE

The Women's Physical Education Building and surrounding lawn was the scene Sunday for the annual C.A. Picnic put on to introduce the Christian Association and its functions to the incoming freshmen coming freshmen.

coming freshmen.
Rousing games of volleyball, badminton, ping-pong, dodgeball, and frisby started the show on the road. Soon everyone moved inside where they were entertained by the very talented Buffy St. Marie, who sang and played her guitar, and Gail Osbaldeston, who played the accordion and led spirited group singing. Steve who played the accordion and led spirited group singing. Steve Allen served as the M.C. and Dave Harrower, the C.A. President, introduced this year's officers: Steve Allen, Betty Bamford, Paul Hoden, Ruth MacLeod, Anne Resign and Laby Statement Anne Resigh, and John Slattery

Following this, freshmen were urged to sign up for the various C.A. committees and service groups and to view the displays of handicraft which the mentally ill children at Belchertown had made.

Finally, the three hundred and fifty or so persons gathered in the game room to partake of the ing statements is the Slater Food Management Service, one of the largest such organizations in the country. It serves three meals a day to 150,000 college students in 138 colleges in 27 states.

Under direction of Mildred A. Baker, staff consultant for school food service, the Slater has just completed a pilot food preference survey at three colleges: Temple University, Philadelphia; Transylvania College, Lexington, Ky., and Franklin & Marshall, Lancaster. Pa.

Slater felt its meals were healthful, nutritious, well cooked, attractively served. But the firm asked itself, was it really doing the job properly?

The survey was the result.

"The tensions and difficulties of college are such that it is our obligation to try to provide the students with a pleasant interlude during food service," Miss Baker said. "We can meet these requirements through food they like to eat." like to eat."

The lengthy, detailed question-naires were drawn up with the assistance of consulting psychol-ogists and were filled in by stu-dent volunteers, some of them.co-operating as part of a project in their psychology classes. Some 220 questions were asked and space was left for individual com-ments on items of local regional ments on items of local, regional or foreign interest.

The survey developed that students like gelatin for dessert, but don't care for it in salads; they like potatoes in any form but prefer them French fried; they like varied and hearty breakfasts; and the exotic avocado is high on the don't-like list. College students, apparently, are anxious to try new dishes. They expressed a desire to try Nesselrode pie, Bavarian cream, orange ambrosia, okra, grits, fresh vegetable aspic. snow pudding and Welsh rarebit.

An odd fact is that although they indicated they would like to take a fling at fresh vegetable aspic, most students turned thumbs down on gelatin salads.

Same thing.

On the breakfast side, oatmeal topped the list along with corn topped the list along with corn flakes. Hot cakes shared honors with scrambled eggs. And all tyes of juices were popular.

For lunch, most students indicated they liked tomato juice, a hamburger, French fries, tossed green salad, strawberry shortcake and milk.

Their "ideal" dinner would include fresh fruit cup, roast round of beef with brown gravy, of beef with brown gravy, whipped potatoes, buttered green beans, dinner rolls, ice cream, brownies, and a choice of coffee, tea or milk.

At the other end of the menu, the so-called "riot" dinner they would pass up—forcibly if nec-essary—includes jellied consomme, braised liver, okra, turnips, fresh vegetable aspic, bread pudding and buttermilk.

Although okra is on the "riot" dinner, it also appears on the list of "want to try" foods.

Among some of the other don'tlikes are pickled beets, cucumber and onion salad, steamed cabbage, watercress, cheese fondue and carrot and raisin salad.

Intramural Football Season Begins Monday With IFC

by JAY BAKER '63

The Redmen football team downed Maine last Saturday 21-13 to open the 1960-61 football season. Next Monday, the intramural football year formally begins. For the first week only, the I.F.C. teams compete, with the Dorms and Independent teams taking the field the following week.

Every team in the I.F.C. plays two games the first week, beginning September 26 at 6:30 when QTV goes against LCA, and ASP takes on KS. However two teams, QTV and TKE, have to play three games this week, but this will only happen once during the season.

Last year's champions, SPE, are pre-season favorites to retain Their crown. However, TC, KS, and TEP all have the potential and ability to overthrow the Sig

Eps.
On October 3, the Independent and Dorm league gets under way while the IFC teams take a week break. As of now, the Dorm schedule is incomplete. The first week of IFC competition is listed below:

A spur of the moment application was the first step in capturing the Miss Massachusetts crown for Barbara Feldman '61 of Kappa Alpha Theta. The night before she noticed an announcement of the contest at Shopper's World in Framingham and felt the urge to enter it.

The next day, June 17, after working at the Natick Country Club, she selected a bathing suit and gown and arrived for the contest at 7 p.m.

She was one of 21 contestants from various towns and cities in the state. Ten of these were chosen for the finals after being judged on poise and beauty.

After two more eliminations, Barbara was chosen Miss Massachusetts and crowned by Miss Greece of 1959. This honor was not a first for the Feldman family. Barbara's sister, now Mrs. Daniel Bock, was Miss Massachusetts of 1953.

Barbara's prizes included $500.

Barbara's prizes included $500, which she spent on a wardrobe for the Miss Universe Pageant.

July 1 the girls from New England and many of the European representatives flew by jet to Miami, where they were greeted by their hostesses and many photographers.

Activities of the Pageant started when each girl was presented in her native and state costume. Barbara was dressed as a Pilgrim and presented the city of Miami Beach with a cranberry scoop magazine rack. She was chosen among the 15 finalists. Finally, Miss Utah was crowned Miss U.S.A.

Barbara comments, "As I look back on the contest I think it was probably the most wonderful experience I've ever had. I think it was so wonderful to live with a girl from another country for ten days and make so many wonderful friends." Miss Maine, a junior at U.N.H. will be her guest for the New Hampshire game.

Prof. Hunsberger Recipient Of NSF Chemistry Grant

A major grant for the support of advanced research in chemistry has been awarded to the University of Massachusetts by the National Science Foundation.

The University today announced receipt of $25,000 from the NSF for a three-year research project to be conducted by Professor I. Moyer Hunsberger, newly appointed head of the department of chemistry. Hunsberger will study "the hydrogen and bond order in heterocyclic and aromatic systems."

Hunsberger, who recently succeeded Walter S. Ritchie as head of the department of chemistry, holds B.S., M.S., and Ph.D. degrees from Lehigh University. A distinguished researcher in the field of organic chemistry, he has been the recipient of more than 15 grants for the support of studies in the field of sydnone chemistry, a branch of heterocyclic chemistry.

Civil Service Commission Announces Annual Exams

The United States Civil Service Commission has announced that applications are now being accepted for the 1961 Federal Service Entrance Examination—the examination through which young people of college caliber may begin a career in the Federal Civil Service in one of some 60 different occupational fields. The positions to be filled from the FSEE are in various Federal agencies located in Washington, D.C., and throughout the United States.

The examination is open to college juniors, seniors, and graduates, regardless of major study, and to persons who have had equivalent experience.

The first written test will be held on October 15 for those who apply by September 29. Five additional tests have been scheduled for this school year. Dates are November 19, 1960, January 14, February 11, April 15, and May 13, 1961.

Acceptance of applications for Management Internships will be closed on January 26, 1961. For all other positions, the closing date is April 27, 1961.

Interested persons may obtain further information about the test and how to apply from Civil Service Announcement No. 240. Announcements and application forms may be obtained from college placement offices and post offices.

Unless an amendment is added to the sill as it was reported out of the committee, the school will not get the money providing for either the $2,500,000 Physical Education Building or the $250,000 for the development of land behind the building.

Religious Issue Topic Of Sen. Flanders Talk

formative lectures on the coming presidential election was given by Senator Flanders in the Council Chambers, S.U., at 4:00, Wednesday the 21st. The topic covered in this lecture is one of the uppermost questions in the minds of those interested in the November election. That is, how will the religious issue affect the race for the Presidency.

A fundamental question on which Senator Flanders agrees with the Papacy is that moral considerations are the ruling considerations in relationships of people with each other. The Senators believes that tor believes that moral problems must be met and solved before practical issues can be resolved. However, since the Roman Catholic point of view believes that the Holy City is authoritative in application of the moral law, many people wonder what stand Kennedy will make.

Certainly, as it was pointed out, Kennedy has often stated that he would use his own con-science as President of the

A question and answer period followed the lecture, in which such questions, as—Will the religious issue in the Democratic ious issue in the Democratic South change the vote, and will some make a protest vote against the Church, not against Kennedy?—were thoughtfully answered. A different view of the religious issue was brought up when it was wondered if Nixon's Quaker beliefs would alter our military situation. Many other interesting and vital questions were raised, all of which were intelligently and painstakingly answered. Surely, having attended this, there is great incentive for going to the remainder of the series.

R.D.'s To Produce Pulitzer Prize Play

The Executive Board of the Roister Doisters has chosen Thomas Wolfe's Look Homeward, Angel, adapted for the stage by Ketti Frings, as the 1960 fall production.

Look Homeward, Angel was the winner of the Pulitzer Prize in playwriting for 1958 and of the New York Critic's Award as the best play of the season. The play, adapted by Miss Frings from the last third of Wolfe's novel, published in 1929, deals novel, published in 1929, deals with the Gant family: Eugene Gant, whom it is claimed was Wolfe's self-portrait; Eliza Gant, Eugene's mother, a woman ob-sessed by her material belong-ings; W. O. Gant, the father and stonecutter imprisoned by his failures; Ben Gant, the brother failures; Ben Gant, the orother who never broke away. The mood, alternating between sardonic humor and grief, and its intensity, have made Look Homeward,

MISSING:

These Have Disappeared.

Stealing anything, whether it be large or small, is a serious offense . . . no matter how you look at it.

Pilferers have victimized the Student Union bookstore, according to Augustine J. Ryan, manager, for quite some time. The above photo is typical of the missing at the end of a rush period such as last week's. Unbelievably, such major items as textbooks have been taken. The list lengthens as the handy pocket-size items like pens, erasers, and various other supplies are added. These are taken regular-

The kleptomaniac, the guy with the slight of hand, and the petty thief-all are, according to that timeworn expression, cheating themselves. But it's true.

Bookstore profits are broken down into allotments, one for the Student Union improvement fund, another for the expansion of the bookstore. Stolen articles mean a loss in profit, as well as an added expense for the SU purse, in order to replace this merchandise. Since the Student Union is run by and for the benefit of the students, it is evident that the student who pilfers is taking something out of one pocket to put in the other. All he might get by this transaction is a jolt of smugness.

At the same time he is risking his reputation and putting to stake a sense of security and a sense of belonging to the campus community. Student probation or expulsion is not impossible. "The student caught pilfering in the bookstore," Robert S. Hopkins, Jr., the Dean of Men, said, "will most certainly be put on probation. This probation could be for an indefinite period of time. The student may also be put on suspension indefinitely or even expelled from the

Is this worth the risk?

The Umie Spirit

Nothing is more effective in building up the spirit of the team, and, for that matter, the spirit of the fans, than a lively football rally. It has been the custom here at Umieland to stage a rally behind the Student Union previous to each home football game. The voices of exuberant UMass students at these rallies have been known in the past to carry for miles, so it should be a simple matter for this year's larger student body to make itself heard and feared in nearby Springfield, where, no doubt, the AIC campus will be holding its own rally.

So let's get out of our dorms at 6:45 tonight and give some added heart to our football squad. Then get out to Alumni Field en masse Saturday at 1:30 p.m. and witness the devastating effect of our rally on the AIC crew.

WHO ARE THE COOKS?

With the start of each semester, a controversy arises which grows progressively worse as the year wears on. Indeed, we saw the first dawn of that conwears on. Indeed, we saw the first dawn of that controversy flash upon the editorial page this past Monday. One amongst us found cause to question the caliber of the food thrust upon him last Friday night at the Commons. The dissidence within our academic atmosphere has narrowed itself down to the dining halls and their product.

Our controversy is an ancient one. Students have estioned the cook's ethics here long before most us saw dawn's rosy fingers. Perhaps it is time dismiss these constant dining complaints as are folly; but this dismissal should be a CRUSH-

Therefore, let us once and for all pose answers to the questions themselves. Why are not all the foods prepared and cooked as well as they should be cooked? Many reasons present themselves. You may judge for yourselves those answers which are to be digested as valid and those to be disearded.

In answer to the question: could it be that there In answer to the question: could it be that there is student help, otherwise not authorized to tend or prepare food, doing cooks' work? Could it be that there are hired help who lack cooks' ratings but nevertheless prepare our meals? Could it be that there are men with cooks' ratings who are doing janitor's work while a student hired to wash waste harrels is taking ears of your present at the cooks'. barrels is taking care of your peas and potatoes?

Why is it that occasionally there is not enough food from the regularly scheduled meal to go around and substitutions must be made for the last forty people in the Commons line? The reason? Could it that there are janitors on campus who are gi priority over students in getting their meals first and those said meals can be eaten free of charge, maybe? Could it be that those janitors aren't content to feed only themselves and bring their wives to

Students ponder the reasons why the University bookstore has to be the one to make the "6%" profit to support the Student Union overhead. Why must the profit be made from our hard earned, summer cash? Could it be that the Commons doesn't have the heart to make a profit from the many, many citizen organizations which meet on our campus and for whom the Commons folk gladly and freely give of their time to cook the organizations' meals. But this is only fair; after all, these groups are composed of income earning men and women while we are only students knee deep in loans—part of which we hand over for the "6%" bookstore profit.

Why is it that none of the dining halls ever see those tenderloin steaks? The kitchens receive dozens of sides of beef and from every two of them there should be cut ten loins. Somehow they never make it to our plates. Could it be that the janitors are served these morsels? With such confusion existing within one of the largest and most expensive institutions on campus, the University has seen fit to employ a full-time officer from housing to check up on rooms and counselors.

With our dining questions finally answered with more questions, let us now put aside this nonsense. Granted, the food is not enough at times, it is poorly prepared at times, and it is not always of the highest grade. But at least we have reason to suspect why these conditions exist. For now, reach for that tray, don't drop that fork, and dig in, for to-morrow.——?

In Changing Times

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE PROBLEM OF SURVIVAL

by MIKE PALTER '63

As the needs of man have changed, so have his institutions. Instead of treading the long path of history to prove this thesis, however, I feel it sufficient for us to look back a relatively few years. Since the late thirties, there becamber the late thirties, there has perhaps been no more significant man-of-change in our country than President Roosevelt. Seeing the injustices that the laissez-faire society of "rugged individualism" had created, the liberal mind of Roosevelt sought out necessary changes in existing institutions. Government emerged as the guardian of the rights of the "little man"—rights that had been trampled the "little man"—rights that had been trampled upon with ever increasing ferocity following the Industrial Revolution. Instead of merely being a passive regulator, government constituted an active and vital force. Society was molded for the good of the whole and not the few, the true Liberal concept. And so it was that the essential dignity of man, which had lain dormant in America, for half a century arose under the stimulus of one who undertury arose under the stimulus of stood.

It is significant, however, that the innovations f Roosevelt came about not as a preconceived plan at as a reaction to the effect of existing situations. (It is obvious that Social Security would never have come about without the adverse effects of the In-dustrial Revolution and the subsequent machinations of Big Business.) Thus, as situations are obviously in a constant state of change, so must man adapt himself to this change.

It is evident that America must meet the chal-lenges of the new situations in the twentieth cen-tury. And what are these challenges? They are, I

- The emergence of Soviet Russia, Communist China, and the Communist block of nations. This needs the most serious consideration.
- (2) Atomic energy and its uses.
- (3) The condition of our economy and the role of government as a force in this economy.
- (4) The emergence of the newly independent, "un-committed nations."

These are not necessarily listed in the order of their importance. Each of the issues will take on more or less significance as the over-all picture changes. That these four do constitute the most important aspects of our times is, however, obvious. One need not be overly perspicacious to realize that the successful confrontation of these problems is a prerequisite to the freedom, indeed the very survival, of mankind in the years to come.

PARTIES RUN BY PRESSURE

Have pressure groups taken over America's political parties? One of the nation's most respected political columnists apparently believes they have to a large extent.

New York Times Columnist Arthur Krock, writing from the Democratic National Convention, implied the charge when he reported that two controversial groups had been allowed to dictate party policy on issues affecting the whole nation.

"The most controversial issues in the Democratic party and in the nation-Federal enforcement of equal rights and a national labor policy—were assigned in effect to the N.A.A.C.P. and the A.F.L. C.I.O. for drafting into the convention platform," Krock wrote.

"Each pressure group phrased in all its demands, and both the Platform Committee and the Convention accepted them practically without modifica-

"What will you write about in your column?" asked one of the makers whose name is Trueblood Strongheart.

ONCE MORE UNTO THE BREACH, DEAR

FRIENDS

Today, if I am a little misty, who can blame me? For today I begin my seventh year of writing columns for the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes.

Seven years! Can it be possible? It seems only yesterday I walked into the Marlboro offices, my knickers freshly pressed, my cowlick wetted down, my oilcloth pencil box clutched in my tiny hand. "Sirs," I said to the makers of Marlboro—as handsome an aggregation of men as you will find in a month of Sundays, as agreeable as the cigarettes they make—mild yet hearty, robust yet gentle, flip-top yet soft pack—"Sirs," I said to this assemblage of honest tobacconists, "I have come to write a column for Marlboro Cigarettes in college newspapers across the length and breadth of this great free land of America. We shook hands then—silently, not trusting ourselves to speak—and one of the makers whipped out a harmonica and we sang sea chanties and bobbed for apples and played "Run, Sheep, Run," and smoked good Marlboro Cigarettes until the campfire had turned to embers.

"About the burning issues that occupy the lively minds of college America," I replied. "About such vital questions as: Should the Student Council have the power to levy taxes? Should proctors be armed? Should coeds go out for football?

"And will you say a kind word from time to time about Marlboro Cigarettes," asked one of the makers whose name is Honor Bright.

"Why, bless you, sirs," I replied, chuckling silverly, "there is no other kind of word except a kind word to say about Marlboro Cigarettes—the filter cigarette with the unfiltered Marboro Cigarettes—the inter cigarette with the unfiltered taste—that happy combination of delicious tobacco and exclusive selectrate filter—that loyal companion in fair weather or foul—that joy of the purest ray serene."

There was another round of handshakes then and the makers squeezed my shoulders and I squeezed theirs and the makers squeezed our own. And then I hied me to my typewriter and began the first of seven years of columning for the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes.

And today as I find myself once more at my typewriter, once more ready to begin a new series of columns, perhaps it would be well to explain my writing methods. I use the term "writing methods" advisedly because I am, above all things a methodical writer. I do not wait for the muse; I work every single day of the year, Sundays and holidays included. I set myself a daily quota and I don't let anything prevent me from achieving it. My quota, to be sure, is not terribly difficult to attain (it is, in fact, one word per day) but the important thing is that I do it every single day. This may seem to you a grueling schedule but you must remember that some days are relatively easy—for example, the days on which I write "the" or "a". On these days I can usually finish my work by noon and can devote the rest of the day to happy pursuits like bird-walking, monopoly, and smoking Marlboro Cigarettes.

The makers of Marlboro are happy to bring you another year of Max Shulman's free-wheeling, uncensored column—and are also happy to bring Marlboro Cigarettes, and for non-filter smokers—mild, flavorful Philip Morris.

Acute Lack Of Proper Facilities Problem At Curry Hicks Building

Many upperclass students de-sirous of being issued clothing and baskets for the purpose of working out in the cage during their free time have been turned down

This situation has not occurred because of the mere whim of the people in charge over at the cage, but because there are enough facilities only for those students enrolled in physical education courses for credit, and to mem-bers of freshmen and varsity squads.

Since the Cage was built in 1931 the number of students using the building for instructional purposes has increased over 700% beyond the number for which it was originally designed.

The 1800 baskets currently available for assignment represent the maximum number that can be provided within the limits of restricted storage space. 1,-740 baskets are now assigned to students enrolled in the general and major physical education programs. The remaining baskets must be held in reserve for freshand sophomores cupying freshman and varsity fall sport lockers, and who, upon termination of the sport season, must relinquish their sport lockers, re-enter the general program, and be issued general program clothing and a basket.

Thus, all exuberant upperclass-ien must either contain their men must either contain their athletic tendencies, or supply their own clothing.

Booters Travel To New London For Initial Clash

by DAVE WILLARD '64
After watching Coach Briggs set his Soccer team through their paces in the final warm-up prior to their first game with Coast Guard on Saturday afternoon, one can appreciate the predicament he's in.

On the eve of his first game he is still puzzled as to who will romprise his starting line-up. Yesterday he had his charges seriamage the Freshman team, with the result being the Frosh put up a stiff battle, which must have surprised the varsity, to say the least, as they were hard-pressed to keep up the pace set by frivolous Freshmen.

Coach Briggs must have winced more than once from the side-lines as he saw the Frosh invading his team's defense throughout the work-out. However it must be said in the Varsity's behalf that said in the varsity's behalf that they were trying out many of their reserves throughout, as the coach wanted to take a look at his bench strength.

Once the more experienced boys got in as a unit they began to click and their chances against the men from New London soared.

Although Mr. Briggs is not sure of his starting line-up, man for man, he does have a pretty good idea whom he is going to

First looking at the front line and working from the outside in; at the wing positions there are three main candidates. Stam Paleocrassas seems to be almost a sure bet at one extreme. That leaves Weeks and Packard to battle it out for the other end.

At one inner we have Andy At one inner we have Anay Psilaskis, co-captain who is one sure starter. The other inside slot is a battle between Graves, Tzellas, and DeFillipi, with the latter seeming to have the inside track

At center, returning letterman Kowell seems to have it just about sewed up.

As to the three vacant halfback As to the three vacant halfback jobs, which have proven to be coach Brigg's strongest headache, the sextet from whom the able mentor has to choose from includes: Repeta, Amundson, Van-Ambraugh, Richards, Kendra, Mraz, and maybe Chuck Hulett, the other co-captain, who can fill in here or at fullback. Whether coach Briggs pulls these names out of a hat or what, it certainly is a tough decision.

Besides Hulett at fullback Hawes, Anable, and Aksionczyk are all vicing for the fullback positions. Hawes seems to be al-most a certainty for one side.

Although Worsh has been absent from the last few practices he could very well be Mr. Stop-It for the first game, His chief opposition for the goalie slot comes from Chiesa, who will probably be the second man.

The booters will travel to the Coast Guard Academy Saturday for their first clash of the season.

Pope John XXIII has announced the preliminary preparations to form a great ecumenical council, to be held around 1963, for the purpose of reconciling the Catholic-Protestant rupture. This is only the twenty-second council in the Catholic church's long history.

the Attorney General's office. The controversy began when the Auburn School Committee re-fused to pay tuition amounting to $900 for two of its high school graduates who applied for admis sion to Worcester Industrial Technical Institute. The Auburn School Committee unanimously supported superintendent of Au-burn schools, Dr. John H. Gotschall's decision of recommending no action, by a vote of 5 to 0. "But the State Department of Education overruled us," said Gotschall, "They said that we are responsible for the tuition and transportation, even though both boys have already gone through Auburn schools at town expense.

The controversy is where does the responsibility end. Dr. Donald C. Abbey, chairman of the Auburn School Committee, said, "We feel that the town's responsibility has ended. If the boys had wanted to go to vocational had wanted to go to vocational school as undergraduates we'd gladly have paid for it. PRESIDENT LEDERLE

This week Dr. John W. Lederle arrives on campus to assume the responsibilities, and the headaches, that go with the presidential post here at the University. He will be the fifteenth president in the history of our 97 year old Federal Land Grant school and a successor to the well-remembered and "controversial" fourteenth president.

It is large footsteps that our new president is called to fill. His predecessor, it may be remembered, had won the admiration of many by his efforts and determination to bring the University to new heights. One might say—we have been pulled up by our bootstraps, and we're on the horse. We want to win the race; that is, we want to see UMass develop into an intellectual and cultural center capable of producing well-qualified, and vigorous leadership and know-how for the nation.

It is thus fortunate that Dr. Lederle comes to us with a background rich in experience. His record has included such positions as: professor of political science at Brown University, attorney, state comptroller and head of the Michigan Department of Administration, as well as posts on several government committees. Prior to his appointment to UMass, he was professor of political science and director of the Institute of Public Administration at the University of Michigan.

At the same time we are proud to have Dr. Lederle come to a campus with a new, up-to-date look—with a look of progress created by nearly a decade of determination and effort spent by our administrator in promoting an expanding university system.

We whole-heartedly welcome Dr. Lederle and his family to Amherst and the University during this early autumn week. We hope that he will find his presidential term here gratifying. We also look forward to his comments and his statements concerning his policy-plans.

LETTERS

FAITH PAYS

To the Editor:

"We will keep faith with you who lie asleep."
Recent developments seem to indicate that faith is paying off, at least as far as the commuters are concerned. Rumor has it that this group is coming back to life. The last two meetings of the Commuters' Club have been blessed with a surprisingly large turnout. Congratulations to the membership!

Another indication of new life is the sudden interest in the coming elections for Senators to represent these students. Nomination papers for the four openings have thus far been obtained by at least five individuals. Simple subtraction indicates that the Russian (you remember last year's election where only four people ran for the four openings) ballot is disappearing from campus. Let's hope it never returns.

Since there will be a selection this year, the commuters can no longer sit back and use the excuse that the results don't depend on the voting. They are being faced with a challenge: Can they turn out in a sufficient number to show that they really appreciate the fact that they have a choice? Will only 40 students show at the polls again this year? Will they let themselves be subjected to such a disgrace again? Commuters; I'm from Missouri so you'll have to prove you won't. How? Vote!

IN DEFENSE OF . . . AN INDEFENSIBLE

While the editorial condemning theft in Friday's Collegian is quite true on a more general plane, and theft is rather universally considered a Bad Thing, its various ramifications should be carefully considered, as should the particular circumstances surrounding the act,

Consider our present University environment with its 5500 students. In a society of this size some degree of regimentation is inevitable, but the University authorities seem to have adopted regimentation with the eagerness of a band of West Point drillmasters. Individualism is being methodically destroyed by our conveyor belt education of R.O.T.C. and titanic lecture classes. Students are sinking into such an apathetic sameness that even the couples are drawn up in serried ranks, oscillating in unison on the steps of the women's dorms, resembling something from the R.O.T.C. drill field.

The only act left to the student seeking to retain his individualism is—theft. Taken in the context of this monolithic university, theft actually builds character, for it is the only thing not yet engaged in by large organized groups supervised by authority. It is the sole field left to individual enterprise. Theft should not be condemned, for it performs an important function which the University should but does not; it develops the individual potential.

Neither, I hasten to add, should it be encouraged officially, for with official encouragement would follow official supervision and eventual direction of theft. South College would assume control and thus would all its beneficent effects be lost.

The Iconoclast

by JIM TRELEASE '63

Well, it's been a long week—our first full one on campus. First we had Dean Hopkins address the Fraternity Presidents. Exciting? The pinnacle! During the course of the meeting he had some very important words to say: "Hello there, kiddies... this is Big Brother Bob(not to be confused to Emmery)... Er, you there, coming in the door. You'll have to stop that this minute, Why? Because it just isn't proper to enter a meeting of this sort being carried by three pledges... Now if we can get down to business... Hey, you! The guy who just walked in with the football uniform and cleats on himself. A fraternity president showing up in such garb!... I don't care if you do have a note from Coach Chuck... A note from Warren, too? Well why didn't you say so, sweetie."

At about this time, he discovered a thirst and turned to his assistant and said, "Do me a favor, Billy, and go out and get me a glass of water? . . . No, don't bother first running over to South College to punch in your time card!"

This went on for several hours till finally the dean urged the fraternities to get off the defensive and start bragging. At which time there came such comments as: "Say, terrific", "Splendid idea, Bob!", "About what?"

Moving from the fraternal castles to the men's dormitories, I assume by now most of the tripled rooms are eliminated. Still, there are many who will always remember the last triple room in Van Meter for the '59-60 year. There were these three fellows who absolutely refused to be separated; they were attached to each other, I guess. No, they were not government majors nor did they have plans of defecting to Russia if that's how your mind is running.

Anyway, they refused to clean the room . . . almost forestry majors, they were. Thriving off the dirt of the land. But the boys had real pride in their soil. Why they even insisted on the door being locked at all times so as to prevent any dirt from blowing out of the room. But I suppose if you lived with it long enough, it almost grew on you . . . especially the fungi in the corner. Readily adaptable to either pajamas or Property Of's. Ash trays? Never used them! They were proud to say they were the only room in Van Meter with wall to wall filter tips.

But alas the boys were divided. It seems the one who never got up and instead slept the day around, wrapped up in a mothy grey blanket, disappeared within the room one day. It was several days before the other two discovered he was missing. They immediately reported such to their counselor, an ROTC major, He made them go back to their room and reappear in full uniform before he'd hear their plea. Several days later when they found the said uniforms under the previous year's Gordon Linen towels, the counselor led a platoon into the room but could not penetrate sufficiently the thick brush. Finally, it was Chief Red Blasco who led the charge (taking I.D.'s as he went along) that brought about the discovery of the shifting, whispering sands in room 132 in Van Meter.

Thus, if today you happen to wander into the lobby in Van Meter, you can see hanging from one wall... that old, mothy, grey blanket, under which is a plaque, placed there by the class of '63. It reads: "Taxation without relaxation is tyranny." With this in mind we here honor Frank Mold "who gave his life in the name of freedom of bacteria growth and soil erosion on the first floor, North, Van Meter."

No tears, please. Let's avoid that cheap physical stuff! Turning away from the sublime, we see that President Eisenhower was faced this week with the most crucial decision of his two terms. Should he attend the U.N. General Assembly or the Eastern States Exposition?

Our Friend James Joyce, by Mary and Padraic Colum (Doubleday & Co., 1958), offers to the reader a fairly interesting biography of the noted author of Portrait of the Artist, Ulysses, Finnegan's Wake, and other famous modern works. We see Joyce as a "shabbily dressed, penniless, lewdspoken youth whose disreputability was striking because of the witticisms that rose out of it," a conceited, often impudent, insulting, and condescending fellow known, moreover, as "Kinch the knifeblade" to his friends. We see him sometimes in a light, humorous mood—a comedian among friends and a singer of Dublin folk music. ("Of all writers of today, Joyce has probably the keenest appreciation of the humor that arises out of everyday life," says Colum.) At other times, however, he appears as a sensitive and dedicated writer involved in his dreams of reforming literature.

This is during his youth. After a long series of unpleasant and nerve-wracking incidents resulting in his failure to get Dubliners (his first novel) published, Joyce, disappointed and disgusted, left Ireland permanently for Trieste and there became exposed to a bread-earning grind and financial difficulties which threatened to hinder his creative achievements.

During this period in his life, an inner mutation took place in Joyce which was significant in the life of James Joyce the artist. In his writing he changed from a dialectician to a revealer of the epiphany. He also began to develop a "literature of exile."

Later years confronted Joyce with a great deal of personal pain and sorrow. He was becoming blind and had to undergo many painful operations on his eyes. He also had to deal with the emotional illness and the gradual mental derangement of his only daughter. The last time that the Colums saw him (1939) Joyce appeared "sad, lonely, and resigned" with "the lonely, patient look of the blind in his eyes." Joyce died in 1941 in Zurich.

Mary and Padraic Colum's account of this, the life of James Joyce, is well-written and informative. At some points in the book they relate the characters and incidents in Joyce's works to Joyce's own personal experiences. To the reader familiar with Joyce's works this is interesting and meaningful, but to anyone unfamiliar with Joyce's writings some of it might appear obscure and uninteresting. Many long, detailed passages, moreover, devoted to describing friends of James Joyce and even people only slightly connected with him, seem quite unnecessary and detract from the main subject of the book.

"It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion. It is easy in solitude to live after one's own; but the great man is he who in the midst of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude."

State House ...

As the House today took up the $23,900,000 capital outlay program and a study order for raise for legislators, the knotty question of the closing date for the 1960 Legislature remained unanswered.

Although a tentative date of Although a tentative date of early next week has been set for prorogation, two factors may frustrate legislators cager to begin campaigning for reelection, and could result in a House re-cess while the Senate works. One is the firm determination of Senator William D. Fleming (D-Worcester) to scrutinize all money bills thoroughly before his committee on ways and means makes a recommendation to the main body.

This policy paid off last year for taxpayers when the Fleming for taxpayers when the Fleming committee held up the budget until revenue figures were in and obviated the need for new taxes by cutting the appropriation bill by millions.

The other factor is the current investigations by special Senate committees into charges of irregcommittees into charges of irregularities in the state highway division and the Metropolitan District Commission made by Democratic State Auditor Thomas J. Buckley.

Senator Maurice A. Donahue (D-Holyoke), majority leader, had his committee interviewing highway officials last Saturday in an effort to complete the study and report to the Senate by the first of the month. The committee has until Oct. 11 to report but it is not called upon to make re-commendations for legislation.

This also applies to the MDC investigation being conducted by a committee headed by Senate President John E. Powers (D-Boston). However, President Powers has stated at the current President pubic hearings that changes will be made in the MDC administra-tive set-up and this would require filing of legislation and action thereon by the Legislature. One committee member says the MDC report will be filed Thursday.

Rep. William J. Kingston (D-Springfield), vice-chairman of the House ways and means committee, will have the task plaining why his committee cut nearly $35,000,000 from the $58,-662,000 capital outlay program recommended by Governor Furcolo last January. Many of the Governor's proposals are dear to the hearts of legislators in districts which will benefit.

Further, the joint rules co mittee has approved the study order reported by the ways and means committee which wrapped up in a single package 46 bills carrying salary raises for scores including state officials. judges. There is no question that attempts will be made to pull special bills from it for action.

Once the House completes action on this legislation the supplementary budget, usually last major financial bill be prorogation, will be acted upon Here again, Fleming is committed to a thorough examination particularly in upgradings and re-classifications of jobs that actually mean pay increases.

Another stumbling block for the capital outlay program is the Fleming statement that he will strive to devise means of financing capital expenditures to prevent an increase in the net debt of the state. This could be a time-consuming process as the Senate leadership is definitely against any new taxes.

The sudden deaths of two Superior Court judges, and prior single vacancies in the Supreme and Superior Courts, has placed Governor Furcolo in a more advantageous position to deal with the Legislature. Awaiting action Senate ways and means mmittee is a House-approved bill to add six more judges to the Superior Court. It has been held up because a check disclosed there are insufficient votes for a six-judge bill but there may be enough for three judges.

Currently the House ways and neans committee has 26 measures, including tideland measures involving millions in proposed construction. The Senate committee has about 40 bills including one to increase the weekly compensation benefit for idle work-

It is expected that Governor Furcolo will send in his supplementary budget by Thursday, with debate probable next week.

The Governor's bill to reduce from $1000 to $100 the amount permitted for negotiated contracts, recommended as a result of the MDC inquiry, has been going through the Legislature but many legislators believe the ceiling is too low and will add unnecessary expense.

produced the margin of Saturday afternoon as Massa-chusetts dealt the Aces of AIC a 7-6 defeat before 6,000 fans at Alumni Field.

The Redmen broke into the scoring column with seconds remaining in the first quarter and Bamberry's conversion projected the Redmen into a 7-0 lead. The Aces came roaring back with a six pointer of their own before halftime but failed on the all important two point conversion

During the final half the Redmen forward wall held the Aces to a total of 33 yards on the ground, AIC couldn't accomplish anything via the airways either, as they were stopped with minus yardage. Not to discredit the UM line, but quarterback Dick Glogowski and fullback Andy Griffin were forced to play the entire 60 minutes and obviously tired in the final half. Kicking specialist Bamberry nen showed the fans why he's good to have around as he split the uprights to give the local gridders a 7-0 advantage.

ACES COME BACK

The Aces climbed back into the battle midway in the second period, on a 76 yard march. The drive was climaxed when Glo-gowski uncorked a 17 yard pass to John Mahoney on the UM 19. The fleet footed halfback then outdistanced two defenders and galloped to the end zone unmol-

The men from Springfield then elected to try for the two point conversion which would have given them the lead. Mahoney sprang himself loose in the end zone but Glogowski's pass missed its mark by a couple of feet.

Although both teams played a good defensive game, it appeared to this writer that the UMass tribe wasn't quite up to par for the clash. It may well par for the clash. It may well have been over-confidence on the latter's part. In the long run it appeared that, considering the limited depth of the AIC squad, the Redmen were outclassed by their opponents.

Soccer Team Loses, Prepares For Clark The University Redmen soccer Although the game wa team was repulsed in their initial effort of the season against the Coast Guardsmen at New London Saturday afternoon.

According to Coach Larry Briggs there were several rea-sons for this resounding defeat. They included some glaring errors, which can be attributed mainly to lack of condition and experience. Of course the main reason was the fact that the e powerful and experienced Londoners were just too more good.

Co-captains Chuck Hulett at center halfback and Andy Psil-akis at right inner were the standouts for coach Brigg's squad. Chuck Repeta at left half-back also played a good game.

AS MANY CHANCES

Actually the Redmen had just as many chances as their oppon-ents but they lacked that all im-portant fast foot and big toe to put it in the note

Although the game was not overly interesting from a spec-tator's point of view, it did serve to give Coach Briggs an insight into some of his team's weak-nesses he was not aware of prenesses he was not aware of pre-viously. For one thing he thought his team was in pretty top con-dition, but the coach reported that Coast Guard had at least seven players with more speed than anyone on the Massachu-setts roster with the possible ex-ception of Chuck Hulett.

The coach now has something definite to work on in practices; more conditioning and trying to iron out some of the more ob-vious weaknesses and errors.

With the first game behind them now and, by the way, pro-bably one of the roughest teams they will have to face, Coach Briggs hopes with this added experience the team will make a better showing at Clark next

ASIS Conducts European Safari

by MARK NATAUPSKY '64, Collegian Staff Reporter

Visit Europe while you earn money says the American Stu-dent Information Service (ASIS).

The ASIS was created in 1956 to promote better understanding among the people of different nations through practical applica-tion, educational and recreational activities. To accomplish this, American students are placed in remunerative summer jobs in the European countries, and by conducting a unified program entitled "The EUROPEAN SAFARI".

Before the ASIS, students who desired to travel in Europe had two choices. Either they could travel on their own, or they could join a tour. Each method had its unique disadvantages, both were extremely expensive. ASIS eliminated these disadvan-tages, while it offered many ad-vantages of its own. Since ASIS is a non-profit organization, it can conduct inexpensive tours of various duration. In addition, ASIS participants have the op-portunity to get to really know a European Country as well as the people in it. They do this by working side by side with the people of the various countries in jobs ranging from construc-tion work to office work. At the same time, they are earning mon-ey at the same rate as the people ey at the same rate as the people of that particular country.

Each EUROPEAN SAFARI such items as a round trip flight with hot meals, and a rrip flight with hot meals, and a reception and orientation upon arrival in Europe. Well in ad-vance of the time of departure, members receive a set of language records to enable them to learn basic foreign language phrases. An ASIS student membership pass entitles all con-cerned to discounts on many items while in Europe. Summer jobs, for those who want them, are arranged by ASIS for a duration of either one month or two. All participants are also fully covered by health and accident insurance during the entire trip.

Dietel Says Pay Rate Hinders UM Growth

by JAMES R. REINHOLD '61

News Associate

Editor's note: This is the first in a series of articles offering the opinions of prominent individuals on various facets of UMass educa-

"The rate of faculty turnover at the University of Massachusetts is not overly alarming" stated William M. Dietel, Associate Dean of Men at Amherst College. Dietel, himself a former assistant professor of history at UMass, stated that every campus is feeling the effects of faculty "raiding" by competing institutions and industry. "All institutions will witness a large personnel turnover in the next fifteen years, for the rate of increase of openings on faculties will increase not arithmetically but geometrically in years ahead."

UMass Cannot Compete For New Faculty
Dietel added, "The University of Massachusetts, however, is at a distinct disadvantage with competing institutions in terms of the Dietel added, "The University of Massachusetts, however, is at a distinct disadvantage with competing institutions in terms of the low salary scales. Legislative appropriations must come about if the University is to compete for faculty.

"In California, for instance, the statewide university system there can successfully raid from other schools because of its pay offerings. Their Davis branch is one that has been able to go from an agricultural school into a liberal arts college with a top faculty".

Reasons For Faculty Resignations Cited

Dietel stated he did not believe that young instructors come to the University with the idea of staying only a few years while they gain experience, before moving to a "better" institution. "I will grant that you will find most of your turnover at UMass is among the younger faculty", he added, "but I believe they originally came with every idea of staying because it is a growing, moving, rapidly changing place, full of excitement. They later leave because of poor salaries, unsatisfactory promotion policies, and from other frustrations encountered."

Dietel stated that faculty shortages are widespread, and concountered."

Dietel stated that faculty shortages are widespread, and continuing to increase. "Mass lecture courses are a frequent result. These large sections bring about a diminution of the quality of education by a loss of contact. For the really bright student, these mass classes really don't matter", he continued. "But it is the man in the middle, the average student, who gets hurt. These educational drones take their exams, and pass their courses, but really do nothing more than turn higher education into a bookkeeping process with so many credits, courses, and letter grades.

"A large class is fine as long as every student is following the argument at hand, but if one loses it he cannot ask questions. In every classroom there must be constant teacher student interchanges, even if they are unspoken in the mass lecture courses. The faculty members who can communicate with every member of a large lecture section are indeed rare". Dietel added that a poor instructor in a small class is inferior to a good professor in a large section.

The legislation proposed by the Governor increases the present Board of Trustees of the University of Massachusetts by three— the Commissioner of Public the Commissioner of Public Health, Mental Health, and one other to be appointed by the Governor with the consent of the Council from a list to be sub-mitted by the Massachusetts Medical Society.

The cost of the expanded facilities at the Shattuck Hospital and the medical school building is estimated at $17 million, of which at least $3 million dollars in available in federal funds.

The Governor has recom-nended that the $14 million be appropriated out of the surplus of approximately $20 million which has become available as a result of prudent executive management and the cooperation of all departments and agencies of the state government in pur-suit of maximum economy.

The Governor stated that by appropriating this sum directly of general revenue, for the first time Massackhusetts will be taking effective steps toward limiting future debt obligations of our citizens.

The Governor's special message states that the need for a medical school arises from the need for more general practitioners and the rapidly increasing demands by our people for more medical

Some Good Signs

Last spring a controversy arose when the selections for the Maroon Key and Adelphians were chosen. At the time it was as serted that fraternity politics dominated the selections system and that it was time for something to be done to clean up the two groups by bringing in a new selection sys-

Action against the Keys was taken by the RSO Committee, which ordered them to cease operation until constitutional violations had been straightened out. The Keys did just this. They are now to be congratulated for the fine job they have done helping at football games, rallies, dances, and carrying luggage for the girls. The indica-tion that they will continue to serve their function as a service organization by working on such tasks as the campus elections is a happy note indeed.

The selections of the nine Adelphians also raised some questions last Spring, particularly since they were all fraternity men and four of them from the same house. But if Adelphia continues to organize and follow through, as they have thus far with such things as the registration dance and the football rallies, there can be no grounds for criticism. Certainly they are to be congratulated for the fine job Friday night. The football rally was, by far, the best organized and most successful that this campus has seen in recent years.

LETTERS

THE ARACHNOIDS

To the Editor:

Being occupants of room 132, Van Meter, last year, the authors of this letter can testify that our room was not the Augean stable that Mr. Trelease implied in his column last Monday. He was undoubtedly speaking for room 134, next door to ours, where a remarkable biological experiment was conducted during the first semester, involving the development of a micro-organismic society ruled by an velopment of a micro-organismic society ruled by an army of spiders. As a result of this, our own room became a sort of jumping-off place for those visitbecame a sort of jumping-on place for those visiting the menagerie, and later when the experiment got so out-of-hand that the door to room 134 had to be kept locked, the tourists would throng into 132 to hear the tread of arachnoid feet on the cinder block wall. We would be pleased if your readers would note this confusion of room numbers, since people have recently begun to avoid us.

TWO POSING PROBLEMS

There may be found on the University campus two most serious hazards—potential threats to the student body. The following action may be expected in the near future.

First, the old, rickety stairs behind the new infirmary will be closed off. Trespassing will not be permitted. Such an occurrence has resulted from the present condition of the stairway . . . without a present condition of the stairway . . . without a doubt insecure and unstable. The steps have deteriorated; when wet, the danger is immeasurable and at night there is little lighting. Consequently, the students will have to use the paved hill road.

Second, in reference to the North Parking Lot's condition, the Superintendent of Maintenance, has stated that he would do everything in his power to improve the existing situation—a maze of torn pavement, loose timbers, deep ruts, and uncovered sections of rock and mud, Due to the present construction on this site the Superintendent has been unable to put special improvements into effect.

Thanks go to the superintendent for his interest in the student problems, his support, and co-operation.

IN CHANGING TIMES

PART II ON THE PROBLEM OF SURVIVAL

by MIKE PALTER '63

Every century has its moments of significance, and in the twentieth century there is but one short period of time that stands above any other: the days and weeks of 1917. This period encompassed the Russian, but, more significantly, the Bolshevik, Revolution. It is unnecessary to delve into the foreign and domestic complications of the revolution itself; suffice it to say, the revolution was consolidated and a new theory of government arose based upon the ideas of a German, Marx, and a Prussian, Engels.

It is not without significance that, although the feelings in capitalistic countries crystallized into open opposition to the Russian regime (as evidenced by American intervention), prevailing opinion took the revolution with tongue in cheek. It is not difficult to see why this was so: after all, what were the Russians but a large and geographically divided horde of illiterate peasants?

As the new nation grew and prospered under the "dictatorship of the proletariat," new methods were utilized for the improvement of agriculture and industry. The "five year plans" began to show results, as did the collective farms. The new methods however, were not brought to bear without a loss of life and individual freedom.

In some cases the peasant-farmers revolted, but even-tually succumbed to the will of the government. And thus, the "great experiment" progressed amidst the watchful and suspicious eyes of the world.

And what of the present? The former nation of illiterate disunity, and chaos is now the first nation milipeasancry, distincy, and chaos is now the first nation mili-tarily and economically the fastest growing nation in the world. Those theories upon which a capitalistic society is built are in violent contradiction to the ideas of Marx and Engels. History has indeed shown that the status-quo must inevitably give way to the moving and vibrant force; it is now clear that the capitalistic society must defend itself against the pretensions of Marxian socialism by means of intelligent modifications of existing capitalistic institutions.

I trust that we shall act wisely

THE GROWTH RATE AND ALL THAT

The Soviets, under their numerous economic plans, have achieved a growth rate of about 6% per annum as compared to the 3% maintained by the United States. This is in part

- 1. Their making up of war losses
- 2. Limited consumption
- 3. The fact that they started from a lower base
- 4. Intense simplification and standardization of products.

From mere empirical knowledge we know the advantages of economic growth. During the last century, the per capita output of this country has quintupled. This growth has been reflected in our society; this economic growth has created, from the poorer classes, a bourgeoisie which lives comfortably. Physical labor has been greatly lightened and much leisure has been opened to the working classes. In addition, the remainder, or the "margin," was used by government to establish social services and a public education system. We see this economic basis reflected in our standard of living.

We are now, however, at a crucial juncture in this growth problem. To see this, it is necessary to contrast the char-acteristics of American and Soviet growth. First, how does acteristics of American and Soviet growth. First, now uses the American consumer benefit from this growth? Look around, since we are now in prosperity (although at this writing we find ourselves with almost 6% unemployment and with steel mills operating at 50% capacity.) You see shiny fins amidst weird conglomerations of carefully twisted steel; you see cosmetics that defy description: eye cream, ear cream, throat cream, fingernail cream, etc. You find yourself snickering? Read on and see that we spend:

- 1. More on cosmetics than on sanitation
- 2. Eight times as much on liquor as on water supplies
- 3. Twenty-five per cent more on automobiles, gasoline and auto-servicing than upon education

Do not misunderstand me, my friend. I'm not for unrouged women clad in dreary gray garments, but I am for the taking of a part of that expenditure (which goes toward ephemeral delights) for the purpose of reinvestment, for capital investment is a key to successful growth. This reinvestment, of course, would be toward those industries of importance to the national welfare. To facilitate this diverted and increased capital investment and problems of this nature, man has (conveniently) set up institutous In this case the man has (conveniently) set up institutions. In this case, the institution is called the United States government.

DO OR DIE!

Socialistic heresy, you say!! Yet, we must take action to insure a higher capital investment in industries which have long-lasting importance to the state of the nation. There is no getting around this for, as scientists know,... what comes out has a direct relation to what goes in. Thus, economic growth has the direct relation with capital investment.

As for Russian growth, it is obvious that the Soviets dederable amount of their economic output to investment, notably in the more significant industries. Personal consumption of a Soviet citizen is about one fifth that of ours. In their planned economy, the Soviets are on our economic heels. We may thus do one of two things:

- Encourage limited governmental control over basic in-dustries as in England and the Scandinavian countries, or
- Stagnate under the auspices of the National Associa-tion of Manufacturers and similar groups which have as their principle abjective the maintenance of the

We must realize that the capitalism of Adam Smith is not the capitalism of the present. This is because we have had to adjust to changing conditions. If our society refuses to adjust, it must inevitably decline and fall before the on-slaught of history.

State of the Univ. . .

Commenting on the University's rapid growth, he said, "I don't think the University should increase to 10,000 students yet. Going to college is a privilege, not a right. One shouldn't increase enrollments excessively, but rather find new and better ways to filter applicants. In expanding in numbers, there is always the great temptation to lower quality".

Future Emphasis in Graduate

Future Emphasis in Graduate Study Predicted

Asked where he thought the emphasis will be directed in the future at UMass, Dietel commented that he expects to see a great expansion of graduate great expansion of graduate study in the liberal arts fields, with less attention being given to the technical schools. As a to the technical schools. As a case in point, he cited the UMass government department, noting its rapid evolution in six years from combination with the history department to a department now offering both the M.A. and Ph.D.

THE PLEDGE YOU SAVE MAY BE YOUR OWN

Today's column is directed at those young female undergraduates who have recently pledged sororities and are worried, poor lambs, that they won't make good. Following is a list of simple instructions which, if faithfully observed, will positively guarantee that you will be a mad success as a sorority girl.

First, let us take up the matter of housemothers. The housemother is your friend, your guide, your mentor. You must treat her with respect. When you wish to speak to her, address her as "Mother Sigafoos" or "Ma'am." In no circumaddress her as "Mother Sigafoos" or "Ma'am." In no circumstances must you say, "Hey, fat lady."

Second, let us discuss laundry. Never hang your wash on the front porch of the sorority house. This is unsightly and shows a want of breeding. Use the Chapter Room.

Third, meals. Always remember that planning and preparing meals for a houseful of healthy girls is no simple task. Your cook goes to a great deal of trouble to make your menu varied and nourishing. The least you can do is show your appreciation. Don't just devour your food; praise it. Exclaim with delight, "What delicious pork jowls!" or "What a yummy soup bone!" or "What scrumptious fish heads!" or "What clear water!"

water!"
Fourth, clothing. Never forget that your appearance reflects not just on yourself but on the whole house. It was well enough before you joined a sorority to lounge around campus in your old middy blouse and gym bloomers, but now you must take great pains to dress in a manner which excites admiring comments from all who observe you. A few years ago, for example, there was a Chi Omega named Camille Ataturk at the University of Iowa who brought gobs of glory to all her sorors. Camille hit on the ingenious notion of suiting her garb to the class she was attending. For instance, to English Lit she at the University of Both and solution of suiting her garb sorors. Camille hit on the ingenious notion of suiting her garb to the class she was attending. For instance, to English Lit she wore a buskin and jerkin. To German she wore lederhosen and carried a stein of pilsener. To Econ she wore 120 yards of ticker tape. Her shiningest hour came one day when she dressed as a white mouse for Psych Lab. Not only her Chi Omega sisters, but the entire student body went into deep mourning when she was killed by the janitor's cat.

Finally, let us take up the most important topic of all. I refer, of course, to dating.

As we have seen, the way you dress reflects on your sorority, but the men you date reflect even more. Be absolutely certain that your date is an acceptable fellow. Don't beat about the bush; ask him point-blank, "Are you an acceptable fellow?" Unless he replies, "Yeah, hey," send him packing.

But don't just take his word that he is acceptable. Inspect him closely. Are his fingernails clean? Is his black leather jacket freshly oiled? Is his ukelele in tune? Does he carry public liability insurance? And, most significant of all, does he smoke Marlboros?

If he's a Marlboro man, you know he has teste and discorp.

If he's a Marlboros?

If he's a Marlboro man, you know he has taste and discernment, wit and wisdom, character and sapience, decency and warmth, presence and poise, talent and grit, filter and flavor, soft pack and flip-top box. You will be proud of him, your sorority will be proud of him, the makers of Marlboro will be proud of him, and I will be paid for this column.

The makers of Marlboro, having paid for this column, would like to mention another of their fine cigarettes—mild, unfiltered Philip Morris—available in regular size or the sensational new king-size Commander. Have a Commander—welcome aboard.

"This shift in emphasis, however, is done by re-routing money and personnel towards graduate programs. Graduate education is programs. Graduate education is very demanding upon the staff, and consequently the time spent with undergraduates is cut. A professor can work with a very small number of graduate students, so that these graduates end up reading papers and teaching undergraduate courses themselves.

"Ultimately, everyone is cheated", he stated. "The graduate students are deplorably slowed in their work, and the undergraduates are seriously cheated in terms of aid, care, guidance, and instantian". instruction".

Next week the Collegian presents Rep. Joseph Saulnier (R) of New Bedford commenting on "The State of the University".

Quarterback Club Features Reports On AIC, Harvard

"We'll have a game on our hands." That was the opinion of Coach Chet Gladchuck yesterday at the second Quarterback Club luncheon in the S.U. Ballroom.

Coach Gladchuck admitted that UMass made many mistakes—offensive and defensive—against A.I.C. last Saturday. "If they play that way against Harvard, they'll get beat."

But the squad has been working out to make sure that the same mistakes don't happen again. John Gazourian attended Monday's workout, but he didn't suit up, and will not be ready for Harvard.

Harvard has a small line, averaging 197 pounds; but the team makes up for its lack of lard with its speed and agressiveness.

The smallest man on the squad is Charlie Ravenel, the quarter-back. He is the spark of the club, the key to the Purple offense. If he has a bad day, Harvard will probably disintegrate. "The only way to win," Coach Gladchuck said, "is to stop Ravenel."

Commenting on the chances of the Redmen, the Coach said, "We'll have to play heads up ball, with no mistakes. We'll have to be alert every minute of the game. Those Harvard backs can go all the way in one play.

"We'd have to play over our heads to beat them but we did it before."

SPOT QUIZ

1. The modern pentathlon, which the United States has never won in the Olympics, includes riding, shooting, running, pole-vaulting and fencing. True or False? 2. The Montreal Canadiens hold a National Hockey League record with five straight Stanley Cups. Has any other team won four champion-ships? 3. IS STENGEL THROUGH?

With Williams' retirement with Williams retrements hardly off the presses comes word that Casey Stengel may be in his last season as Yankee pilot.
The report is that the Yankee brass would be pleased to have Casey call it a career. The old professor, due to his imperious and authoritorian ways, isn't very popular with the players. He's the boss and he doesn't want any of the players to forget it.

When Casey benched Mickey Mantle for not running out a ground ball, Mantle was fuming. The rift between them has grown and it may be that there isn't and it may be that there isn't room enough on the same squal for both of them. Perhaps the N.Y. bigwigs think that Mantle is more of a drawing card than Stengel, so they've hinted for Casey to retire.

Sen. Flanders Speaks On Political Topics

by DIANE TOVET '64 Collegian Staff Reporter

The international situation as a campaign issue was the subject of the third in a series of informative lectures given by Senator Flanders in the Council Chambers of the S.U. last Wednesday at 4:00. The Senator said that the international policy has the makings of a live cam-paign issue, but that it hasn't reached its full potential.

It is well-known that our posi-on in world leadership has been weakening in the past few years, partly due to certain weaknesses in Dulles' policy. One defect was considered in our military strategy. The encirclement policy, in which military bases belonging to the United States were stationed around the world, failed for two reasons: many countries felt that they had lost the title to their own government; we were fighting a cold war, not a hot one, and it was being fought just as hard by the Soviets. The infiltrating countries involved in internal turmoil, and offering financial assistance, as well as importing large staffs to help those countries regain their footing. An excellent example of this ocand executed example of this oc-curred when Nasser of Egypt asked the United States for fi-nancial aid in constructing the Aswan Dam, While we were de-bating the issue, Nasser pur-chased a few minor war supplies from Czechoslovakia. Immediatethe State Department can-ed all plans of aid, and forbade sending Care packages to Egyptian schoolchildren. Nasser, in his need, turned to the Soviet in his need, turned to the Countries of the Union and was given immediate aid. This example also points up another weakness in the Dulles policy, the lack of morality used in the means of accomplishing necessary ends. Too often eco-nomic and humanitarian assistance was considered merely a political support.

Opportunities In Agriculture Theme Of Alpha Zeta Meeting

The initial meeting Tuesday evening of Alpha Zeta, the National Agriculture Honor Fraternity, began with the introduction of Acting Dean, Fred P. Jeffrey. The Student's Choice

Nominations for posts to the Student Senate and Student Union Governing Board closed yesterday afternoon. According to the Senate's latest report 80 to 90 nomination papers had been filed for 33 vacancies.

Competitive interest in the student government elections has been higher this year than in the past. As opposed to the four nominees running for the four Senate positions last year, there are now eight. The women's dorms each offers at least a choice between two candidates; most of them have from three to five.

And yet, this degree of competitive interest must be improved. In the men's quarters of the campus there seems to be a general indifference and apathy to the operation and perpetuation of a democratic form of government. Of the men's dorms, each of which is entitled to one representative, three of them-Hills South, Mills, and Wheeler-have only one candidate in the race. The losers are also the winners. The fraternity houses show about as much verve and vigor. According to the Senate election percentages and figures, the fraternities are to have a total of three seats in the Senate. Two nomination papers were submitted.

Six candidacies have been announced for the Student Union Governing Board (SUG) which has for the first time this year given the student body the opportunity to elect three officers, one representative for each of the upper classes. Previously all members had been appointed. Since this will normally be a spring election, the coming week's voting will be pro tempore.

The remaining Senate posts which are not up in the election are the nine Senatorsat-Large. Voted in during the spring, they are a means of keeping continuity in the Senate. The elections will be held on Tues-day during the day in the Student Union for fraternity, sorority, Commuter, and SUG Board nominees. Voting in the dorms will be held during the evening.

We can feel pleased about the fairly high amount of interest demonstrated so far by the candidates in the coming elections. It is now the students' move to find out in whose box on the ballot he'll want to put his X.

once upon a time there lived a cockroach named archy his friend a cat named mehitable and the book im going to tell you about is called archy and mehitable to begin at the beginning i shall start by explaining that archy was in his last reincarnation a vers libre poet also since we are starting like this i feel obliged to mention that mehitable was once cleopatra as well as many other illustrious women of bygone days as a matter of fact mehitable was now in her very ninth life but this information about mehitable although important for background does not help to explain how the book came to be written it all happened because archy had the mind of a milton but was forced by misfortune of his having chosen free verse instead of a noble form like iambic pentameter to dwell in the ignominious shell of a cockroach and to gamble with fleas and suchlike creatures

as you might imagine of a cockroach with the abilities and inclinations of a homer archy was disinclined to leading a normal cockroachish existence because of said disinclination archy occupied many of his nocturnal hours at or rather to be more precise on his bosses typewriter in a poetic and philosophic vein attributable only to the most gifted type of vers libre cockroaches archy comments on life from a bugs eye view because of the apparent difficulties involved archy could not press the cap key and the letter keys simultaneously so that we find his literature lower case and unpunctuated except in unusual circumstances exclamation point

if you see what i mean

but enough of the mechanics in fact enough of this altogether i ll just mention that the bosses name is don marquis and that he first found an archian manuscript in his typewriter on an early morn in 1916 whereupon he immediately had it printed in his column in the new york sun

doubleday and company has seen fit to publish a whole mess of the stuff in a paperback called archy and mehitable its fun

Commuter students note that you will now be able to pick up your copy of the Collegian in the Collegian office after 3:00 P.M. on the day of publication.

Everyone has his bad day in the week and I guess mine was Wednesday. The day started off with the head counselor knocking on my door. Right away I'm out of bed and hiding the hotplate and electric oven. By this time he's grown weary of knocking and decides to walk in . . . with the combination Washer-drier still to be hidden. Well, anyway, this counselor walks in followed by his subordinate counselors. The first thing I say is, "Look, fellas, if the vending machines are in the showers again, it wasn't me this time."

At six o'clock in the morning you have no idea how motley a dozen counselers can look. There was one in full ROTC uniform who kept dressing at close intervals, glancing at a clip-board, doing column rights, etc.; there were two who started a fist fight over who would look at my roomie's Playboy mag; there were three vets who kept trying to show color slides on my blanket... these slides were taken during their various tours of duty such as Japan, Korea, Greece, Mt. Holyoke ... while showing them they all managed to hum in unison various bars of "Over There, Over There..." (Never take a language class with a vet in it because he'll probably use up most of the class time by explaining the different places he had been to in Spain, France, or Germany. This is done to impress the listeners but it actually doesn't, since our society here has little regard for patriots now that Frances Powers seems to have embodied enough patriotism to absolve us from that duty.)

now that Frances Powers seems to have embodied enough patriotism to absolve us from that duty.)

Finally these counselors got around to their request, that being for me to take a personal plea to the former occupants of Room 134 in Van Meter to please return. It seems my column plus the aftereffects of the last season's crops have driven them to erect a tent for dwelling in the President's gardens. This might be a bit crowded on weekends but . . . Naturally, I refused the counselors' request.

With them finally hustled out, I turned to find two more counse-With them finally hustled out, I turned to find two more counselors (Phys. Ed. majors) still in the room—one having a chalk session on my sheets with a magic marker and the other ripping my pillow cases into strips and applying tourniquets to my sleeping roomie . . . who, with one more appropriately placed strip, would be asleep for good. Fortunately for my roomie, I evicted them by dropping a Property Of shirt out of my window and in hot pursuit of this they flew . . . neglecting to reopen the screen I had closed.

Down to zoology I trotted. Wasn't I just settled when all of a bown to 20010gy I trotted, wasn't I just settled when all of a sudden I hear Alan Dary giving a rug commercial behind me, Turning around, low and behold, do I see this frosh holding a transitor radio while he's balanced precariously upside down with his head hanging over the edge of the seat, his shoulders being supported on the seat and one foot, tied to which is the transistor's aerial, pitched ceilingward. The weird part about it is that the lecturer is nearsighted and all during the class seeing the limb overaids he have really and all during the class, seeing this limb extended, he kept calling on the kid thinking that he had a question to ask.

But we're ahead of ourselves. The lecture hadn't quite begun when my pencil broke and I turned to the girl beside me and asked her if I could borrow a pencil. She gives me a look and wants first to see my I.D. So, figuring the kid's just had a three hour lab and is a little high on the formaldehyde, I show it to her and then she decided better the formaldehyde, I show it to her and then she decided better the formaldehyde in the formaldehyde. a little high on the formaldeh cides I better sign for it, too.

Then the prof enters the auditorium, Right away I'm trying to place him in relation to someone he looks like. Then it dawned. He reminded me of a crew-cutted Pat Bradey... you know, the guy who used to drive the jeep on the Roy Rogers show? "Happy trails to you until ..." Remember? Well, this prof starts off with his usual 32 introductory "ah's" and finally says, "If you'll remember, class, last week we finished off the wonderful and beautiful story of protonlasm..."

Of course, you all remember this "beautiful story", don't you? First it was on Broadway where it ran under the title of "The Miracle Worker." Jackie Gleason played the lead role as Carbohydrates, Steve Reeves played Iron, singer Solid Alcohols was handled ably by Dean Martin, and Sidney Poitier, in his first bit part, played Carbon. And when they made the movie of it, Frank Sinatra got the role of Sgt. Epidermis. Even today you can still buy the classic—"Percy Faith Plays the Theme from The Beautiful Story of Protoplasm."

UNIVERSITY OF MAS AQUETTA rea Colleges Form Teacher Pool

Four neighboring institutions of higher education—Amherst, Mount Holyoke and Smith colleges and the University of Mas-sachusetts—have established a joint clearing house to recruit and furnish teaching assistants to their faculties. The assistants are drawn from a pool made up primarily of women college graduates who are married, have children and can work only part Establishment on a permanent basis of the Office of Teaching Assistance, which is now located at Smith College, has been approved by the presidents of the four institutions after a trial period operation. During the trial period among the requests the Office succeeded in filling were the jobs of assistant to the director of one of the college museums, a research assistant with special knowledge of French and interest in Africa, a research assistant on a Foundation project, laboratory aides, and readers in art, anthropology, English and poli-

The four institutions agreed to up the Office on a trial basis after a questionnaire sent to 1165 women in Amherst, North-ampton, Holyoke and other neighboring cities and towns re-vealed that many of these women had advanced degrees and past had advanced degrees and past teaching experience and were available to work part time.

Of the 366 who answered the questionnaire 287 were college graduates, 76 held master's degrees in the arts or sciences, and 12 were Ph.D.'s. A total of 119 had taught in the past. The number of women with children under six totalled 148 and many indicated they would be inter-ested in working, if not imme-diately, later when their children were older.

Stengle, instructor in chemistry, "A spectroscopic study of some Lewis acid-base systems containing boron-phosphorous bonds," $2,000 from Research Corporation of New York.

Discrimination In Grading Precipitates Achievement

The results of a recent grading study at the University of Delaware reveals that "comparison of grade distributions for the past five years show them to be still too heavily biased on the upper side of the scale." Reviews of grading practices show there should be somewhat equal distri-bution of honor grades, credits and failures.

Following the Indian Wars by Oliver Knight (U. of Oklahoma Press): The United States Army was engaged for a quarter century after the Civil War in a series of campaigns against tribes of hostile Indians in the West. The ill-fated Custer expedition against the Sioux was one of these. Newspaper correspondents usually accompanied these troops and shared their hardships and dangers while sending back dispatches to their papers. It is these "war cor-respondents" with whom this book is concerned. Many of them had adventures unequalled by war correspondents who followed larger wars before and after. But Knight is more concerned with analysis of their work than were their reports. Where and when did they get their information? From whom? Under what conditions? What kind of man was each correspondent? It's an interesting study.

Redmen Ready For Crimson; Must Stop Harvard's Ravenel

by W. JOHN
The Massachusetts "Fighting Redmen" hope to disprove the old adage that "lightning doesn't strike twice in the same place," when they engage Harvard on the latter team's home field tomorrow afternoon. The UMass gridders stunned the Crimson in 1954, and may well repeat in the 1954, and may well repeat in the contest scheduled to start at 2:00 P.M.

Two of the most talked about quarterbacks in New England, Massachusetts' John McCormick and Harvard's Charlie Ravenel will match their talents before the expected crowd of 10,000 to 12,000. Last year these two men directed the attacks of their respective teams. The men from Cambridge won that battle though McCormick pitched three long touchdown passes in spec-tacular fashion late in the game.

Harvard's coach John Yovicsin has been busy constructing a de-fensive "bomb" shelter all week in anticipation of the UMass passing attack. The Harvard fensive passing menor has high regard for his intra state rival, and recently said, "this is going to be a tough

The offenses are expected to be essentially the same as those used last week. UMass uses the Smorgasbord—T, an attack which Smorgasbord—T, an attack which borrows from most of the various T alignments, but features the wing and slot formations. WHO'S GOT IT? This is how things looked last year at Harvard Stadium as Coach Rourke's Redmen went down fighting at the hands of Coach John Yovicsin's Crimson team.

The Massmen, scoreless at halftime, scored 22 points dur-ing the final half due to the fine passing of John McCormick.

Although their four touch-downs weren't enough to over-come Harvard's 36 points, the Redmen fought hard and ac-credited themselves on the field. Who knows, things may be better this year.

THAT'S ONE WAY TO DO IT Although the ball may not be touched by the hands in soccer, the head is a handy means of transporting it. All it takes is a good eye, courage and a hard

PLASTIC BAGS MAKE IT EASY

That's it! Just sit back and enjoy the quick-to-prepare meal. This couple is partaking in chicken cacciatore which was heated in a bag.

years ago the bride whose culinary skill was limited to boiling water often found herself in a stew over cooking once the wedding bells stopped chiming.

But not anymore. Now, per-haps to the surprise of hubby, the ability to boil water is all that today's busy bride needs for serving even exotic meals—be-cause of a new packaging idea called "boil-in-the-bag."

All she has to do is place a plastic bag of food into boiling water, remove it in only 5 to 10 minutes, and dispense the heated, ready-to-eat meal on the table

Thanks to this latest trend in plastic packaging, gourment foods can be enjoyed right at home. The meal is pre-cooked and frozen prior to purchase, and there are no cleanup problems due to the bag's easy disposabilty.

Just throw it away after use.

What's more, the boil-in-the-bag meal is now being produced in mass volume these days and can be obtained from the corner grocery store or mail-order catalog-where nearly everything from Welsh rarebit to Hungarian goulash is literally in the bag.

Here are some of the reasons why this bag is called the hottest thing in packaging:

The consumer market for easy-to-prepare meals is growing with the increase in the nation's working force. Latest figures show ing force. Latest figures snow there are more than 12,038,000 employed housewives; 6,959,000 single men; and 5,078,000 single women. These are the too-busy-to-cook groups which he believes are most interested in how to expedite meal preparation.

It enables the housewife to keep stocked up on a variety of meals—fancy and otherwise—with only a minimum of storage space and shopping required. For instance, a full year's supply of

Cost savings as well as time savings are being served up by these bags every day. Up to 50% cost savings already have been reported from their use. It's no longer necessary to purchase and prepare all sorts of meal ingredients because they now can all be packaged in a single bag. Moreover, no mechanical opening devices are needed to open the bag since it is slit on the edges for easy terroportion. for easy tear-opening and dis-

Flanders For Constitutional Amendments

Former Senator Ralph Flanders (R-Vt.) yesterday said that the United States Constitution should be amended so that the members of the House of Representatives should be elected every four years in the same year as the President.

He said the present system allows short range politics to in-terfere with the best interests of the country, explaining that the representatives have to cater to local pressures all the time since they have to face re-election every two years.

The senator also said he dis-The senator also said ite dis-liked the system because it al-lows the complexion of the House to change completely in the middle of the President's term of office.

Governor Names Wife To Position Of UM Trustee

BOSTON — Gov. Furcolo Wednesday nominated his wife, Mrs. Kathryn (Foran) Furcolo of 45 Tudor Rd., Newton. and Longmeadow to be a trustee of the University of Massachusetts.
If approved by the Governor's Council, she will succeed F. Roland McDermott of Wrentham, whose term has expired.

The governor also named for reappointments Dr. Kenneth H. Rice, Sr., of South Deerfield as associate medical examiner of the western district of Franklin County, and Edward T. O'Brien of Easthampton to the Board of Registration in Embalming and Funeral Directing.

Named for a one-year term on the Board of Trustees of the new Southeastern Massachusetts Technological Institute was Mc-Dermott.

In other appointments, governor named J. Leo Ash of Peabody to the Approving Au-thority for Training of Medical Laboratory Technologists; Sam-uel Kovner of Brockton to the Public Health Council, and Mrs. Marisita L. O'Connell of Boston as trustee of the Perkins Insti-tute for the Blind.

(Continued from page 1) Now the big question is, with this record of our weakening what will be the administration policy? Mainly our stand will be one of non-aggressive neutrality.
As for the other points, one can

It is being considered that the responsibility for helping underdeveloped coun-tries be given to the U.N. Also, as for the military policy, our strength should be used not for strength's sake, itself, but rather to buy time for effectiveness in to buy time for effectiveness in other fields.

Concerning the individual can-didates, Flanders seemed to think the forthcoming debate on international issues should tell a great deal. However certain events have given hints to the stand of the candidates. During the U-2 incident, Kennedy suggested that the United States should applearing to the Society gested that the United States should apologize to the Soviet government. Senator Flanders is one of many who see no need for this action. Lodge, the Rep. Vice-Presidential candidate, however, faced the Soviet ambassadors with pictures of Soviet planes McLaughlin's speech was confined to three topics: Urban Renewal and Redevelopment; Transportation; and Education.

Transportation; and Education.

He briefly explained Urban groblem of blight in our large cities. Basically the federal government agrees to pay two thirds of the cost, while the municipalities nay the remaining one third.

ties pay the remaining one third.
One provision of the Urban Renewal program is that the area in question be ruled substandard by the city fathers. McLaughlin cited Boston's West End project in which the area was voted sub-standard. The irate residents, their neighborhood pride aroused, threatened to defend their homes with loaded weapons.

McLaughlin stated it was such problems as that in Boston, and know the principles I stand for and realize that I would not de these principles, Kennedy declared.

Kennedy rolled up 52,972 votes in the primary without making a single speech or accepting a penny from well-wishers. He penny from well-wishers. He sought the Democratic nomination for Governor because he is barred by the state constitution from holding the office after serving three consecutive terms.

Although Kennedy says there is a possibility of his return to state politics in two years, right now his plans are indefinite "and probably won't crystalize until after the election."

"I'm a lame duck treasurer," he pointed out, "and it's kind of lonely these days. No one comes in any more. All I can do is hold the fort until my successor takes over." He added, with obvious pride: "There hasn't been any conflict of interests during my tenure. I haven't feathered my nest while in office. I lived off my salary and I'll leave here with a clear conscience."

Many Heroes In 27-12 Win; Redmen Victory Streak Now

Massachusetts conquered, John Harvard turned over in his grave. Not only the Crimson, but the entire football world was shaken Saturday when the "fighting Redmen" tomahawked Charlie Ravenel & Co., 27-12, before 10,500 sundrenched fans in Harvard Stadium.

Harvard's bleary-eyed patrons at in stunned silence, staring in disbelief. The experts had the Jawns tabbed as the Ivy League kings, this was to be their first undefeated season in nearly 50 years, UMass was only to be another team—another game. Yes, the Cambridge boys had great expectations-but they were shattered when the men from Massausetts arrived on the scene.
KNOCKED OFF CLOUD 9

Harvard had been riding on Cloud 9 following their opening victory over Holy Cross, but it was the fighting Redmen who precipitated the cloudburst.

In the first half the Crimson line collapsed like a summit conference. This was the forward wall which had held Holy Cross to a total of 53 yards rushing, but the Redmen turned it into a sieve. The UM forwards con-stantly opened holes for their hard charging backs. As the left side of the Harvard line was particularly vulnerable to the re-lentless attack play after play was directed toward this weak side.

20-0 IN 18 MINUTES

The visitors spent less than 18 minutes to run the count to 20-0. After Harvard retaliated with two scores of their own, both on long runs, the Redmen wrapped things up when Mike Salem plunged through right guard from one yard out to climax a brilliant team effort.

The UM defensive alignment frustrated the Johnnies through-out the skirmish. Eleven times the QB was dropped behind the line, one pass was intercepted, and the other 5 were ecomplete. Paul Majeski was outstanding as he blocked a punt leading to a touchdown, recovered a fumble to set up another scoring drive, and made several tackles.

Massachusetts' initial drive to paydirt consumed 11 plays, and was climaxed when McCormick bucked through the center from one yard out. John Bamberry's educated toe zoomed the Redmen into a 7-0 advantage.

MAJESKI BLOCKS PUNT Less than four minutes later UMass was back knocking on the door to paydirt. Following the door to paydirt. Following Majeski's block of MaqIntyre's punt, the Redmen took three plays to go eight yards to the goal line. After two short runs, goal line. After two snort runs, McCormick spotted Harry Willi-ford in the end zone and connect-ed. Bamberry's conversion was

by DAVE MANLEY '63 Collegian Staff Reporter

The Young Republicans' club on campus, born and baptized on September 22, has announced its first project, namely, "securing a victory for Saltonstall in November."

The Young Republicans, brain-child of Bob Barney '60 and Gerald Ralston '60, was founded in order to give a "grassroots grasp of good politics, and actively enroll University students in the political process as carried. in the political process as carried out by the Republican Party."

The first step towards a "work-ing affiliation" with the Repub-lican Party was the obtaining of a "Saltonstall Headquarters" in Northampton, which will be Northampton, which will be manned by campus Young Republicans

Immediate plans, said Secretary Dick Boardman, will be canvassing, polling of issues, fund raising, public relations, and a 'Get out to vote' drive. At the second meeting an audience of 36 heard Gerry Ralston's introductory exhortation and a plea for youth and dynam-ism in the Republican Party.

Stating the aims of the Young Republicans, Ralston said, "our aim is to support the regular Party organization and it's candidates," mentioning also the "in-valuable experience and the op-portunities derived from working in a campaign."

A contingent of Young Repubicans was on hand Saturday morning to talk with Senator Saltonstall after he had break-fasted with Bob Barney, chair-

We Really Showed Them!

Our victory over Harvard Saturday was very sweet indeed, but not just because we routed the top contender for the Ivy League

The Harvard attitude of contempt for Marching Band and Precisionettes as well as our football team was all the more reason for us to show them where they stood.

Among the comments made in the Harvard Union where the band and Precisionettes lunched, were references to "hayseeds" and "hicks" and some derogatory remarks about the band and drill teams uniforms. Both the band and the Precisionettes were hissed loudly during their half-time appearances.

As the Boston Globe put it, the famous Harvard Band got no better than a draw against the Redmen band, and it was far outclassed by our crack Precisionettes. Actually, the Harvard Band looked quite ridiculous running around on the field every time they changed formations, while the UMass band maneuvered into much more difficult formations in orderly fashion.

UMass students are very proud of the y we were represented Saturday. The football team, band, and Precisionettes clearly demonstrated their quality, spirit, and sportsmanship.

Lack Of Competition -Only For A Few

Tomorrow, 33 of the candidates running for the Student Senate and Student Union Governing Board will be voted into office for the 1960-61 term. As the final return in nomination papers shows, the competition has been much higher this year. Some of the dormitories have as many as five nominees running for one seat in the Senate. In a few cases—in four men's dorms and for the sorority representative—however, there are candidates running without opposition.

In a sense, this lack of competition, this sign of indifference on the part of the constituent body, "has" to be expected. Wheeler, the upperclassmen's dorm, has failed in the past to produce several nominees in the race for the Senate post.

Whether up for election for the first time or up for re-election, even the well-qualified candidate should have a contender. At least such a race with its opposition forces in play can give us dramatics. It is the competitive spirit that will, in the end, show results. There is little room for a lackadaisical attitude in the workings of student govern-

Although competition has been shown on one side, we have had a bit of apathy on the other. Less than a day remains for campaigning by the candidates. Yet—we may ask—is there also less than a day remaining only to read the clever and not-so-clever posters boasting some potential Senator or SUG Board member's name? A few of us have heard little from the nominees running. Now's the time for us to find out.

Franklin P. Adams in Diary of Our Own Samuel Pepys has said:

IN CHANGING TIMES

Part 3: China — The Revolution by MIKE PALTER '63

In retrospect, it is not difficult to see the futility of Chiang Kai-Shek's defense against the Communist wave of the forties. One must remember that the nationalist government formed in Nanking (1927) constituted only the fractional, non-Communist factions of the Kuomintang. The Communist faction which had been expelled from the Kuomintang previous to the formation of the nationalist government continued, however, to maintain their power in certain key cities. In addition to this, the militarist faction of the Kuomintang maintained control in the areas occupied by their armies. Thus, effective and centralized governmental control was not to be found and the nationalists were forced to utilize any strength that they did have against the Communists, who, under Mao Tse Tung, maintained an effective guerilla force and continually fomented rebellion amongst the peasantry.

In 1931, Japan, eager to maintain its economic and military dominance in southern Manchuria, attacked. A puppet government was set up in Manchuria and the Japanese, intent upon control of China itself, began to expand military operations. As the Japanese began to occupy the costal cities of China, as well as the lower Yangtze Valley, the nationalist government of Kai-Shek was forced to move to Chungking. to Chungking.

While the Japanese were thus expanding and consolidating their power, what indeed was Chiang Kai-Shek doing? He, instead of confronting the Japanese onslaught, continued his fight against the Communists. This policy, which Kai-Shek followed from 1931 to 1937, was, indeed, unpopular with many. Meanwhile, Kai-Shek's incessant campaign against the Communists bore fruit. The city strongholds of the Communists fell and the Red Army was forced to undertake the "long march" to Yenan, which would be (1935) their new capital. (Incidentally, the average age of the commissioned officers in the Communist army was around eighteen).

At this time (1935), a policy change occurred in Moscow. This new "line" called for a united front against the militaristic and fascist powers of Japan and Germany. Kai-Shek, under various military and economic pressures, decided in favor of this united front, and, in 1937, the Kuomintang and the Communists established a working agreement to better facilitate expulsion of the Japanese forces.

As the war wore on, the true character of the Chungking (naalist) government unfortunately was bared. To add to the incr ing inflation, corruption blossomed under the watchful eyes and help-ing hands of Kai-Shek. If there were ever a time when an honest and sincere leader was needed, here it was. Chiang Kai-Shek did not then, nor does he to this very day, face up to the challenge of the tim

The Communists, under Mao Tse Tung, now consolidated their strength and, upon a wave of dissatisfaction and misery, ste engulfed the nationalist forces.

When the war ended, President Truman sent General George C. When the war ended, President Truman sent General George C. Marshall to China "to be of assistance in hastening China's recovery," or, in short, to effect a reconciliation between nationalist and Communist forces. In view of Marshall's subsequent statements and United State's actions concerning the Communists, however, one is inclined to question the validity of Marshall as a politically detached, and thoroughly objective reconciliator. Indeed, during those critical months of 1947, the United States supplied military equipment and officers to the nationalists. Although this can be justified by the supposition that the post-war "line" of the United States would be active opposition against the Communist wave, the intervention was tainted in that it was on healts of severe when the contract of the contract of the contract of the contract of the united States would be active opposition against the Communist wave, the intervention was tainted in that it was on healts of severe when the contract of the contract position that the post-war "line of the United States would be active opposition against the Communist wave, the intervention was tainted in that it was on behalf of a man who, by Western standards, personifies the corrupt and ruthless despot. (Somehow, the State Department always seems to encounter this difficulty—i.e. Franco,

When I began the study of this revolution, I was constantly amazed at the rapidity of the Communist military advances from 1947-1949. Indeed, in 1949 the whole of continental China had fallen to the Communists. Why was this so? This, I believe, can be answered by a general statement:

The yoke of despotism and hunger cannot long endure.

Each alone, . . . yes. Together, . . . not long

Buggy Rug On Exhibition

To the Editor:

People have been constantly asking admission to the controversial Room 132 in Van Meter. When we, the present occupants of Room 132, first saw the intricate mass of cobwebs on the wall adjacent to Room 134, our counselor, the ROTC major, told us that it was a new device for insulating sound, unique to Room 132. The mass of threads gave Jim Trelease the false impression of a Gorden Linen blanket, and, although he was wrong, we now use it for a rug. it for a rug.

The ROTC major, also, was wrong about the web's insulating properties. At night we can still hear the voices of Elliot Gventer and Alan Lebovidge, the present occupants of 134, who have gained st repute as the loudest cat-callers in Van Meter (Drop dead, Greenough!)

We are proud to announce that because the zoology department insists that our rug be put on exhibition, our room is available to spectators for 25¢ during the Thanksgiving vacation. Girls are welcome free after midnight any night of the week.

Robert W. Lees, one of 132's present occupants, has removed the "s" from his last name so as not to be associated with the entomologist from last year, Ronald Lees.

Students, Faculty Invited To Mantovani Reception

Following the concert (tonight) at eight in the Cage, students and faculty members of the University will have an opportunity to meet the well-known Mantovani and his 45-member the familiar, entertaining music we have all come to associate with Mantovani. In addition to his musical accomplishments, Mantovani is reputed to have quite an engaging orchestra at an informal recep-tion in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union at ten

The reception marks the first of what the Concert Association hopes will become a regular feature following every concert. As an experiment, a reception was held last year after the perfor-mance of the Robert Wagner Chorale and found to be successful. At such a reception, it is possible to meet the artists in an informal manner and to catch a glimpse of their off-the-stage personalities.

Tonight will not be the first time Mantovani has appeared at the University, for he appeared here in the second concert of his first U. S. tour. So popular has this musician become, that he is now touring the country for the now touring the country for the fourth time. The program this evening promises to be one of

He said that the MTA covers fourteen towns. There is also the Eastern Mass., Worcester St. Railway, and several other short-er lines in the Greater Boston area. None operate on an inte-grated basis. There is little or no co-operation, and the service is not as good as could be for the people.

DR. FROOD'S THOUGHT FOR THE DAY: 'Tis better to have loved and lost than to have spent the whole weekend studying.

there's one thing about him I can't stand. He wears button-down collars but never buttons the little lapel buttons. Why is this?

Clothes Conscious

DEAR CLOTHES: Don't let this worry you. It's just that his thumbs are too big.

Dear Dr. Frood: Once and for all - is it right or wrong for a man to marry a girl for her money?

DEAR RIGHTEOUS: Nowadays this isn't simply a matter of right or wrong. There are the tax angles to consider.

Dear Dr. Frood: I don't understand my boy friend. When we are all alone and the moon is full, he tells me he worships me. But during the day, he crosses the street when he sees me coming. What is wrong?

DEAR LOVELORN: Did it ever occur to you that he may be a werewolf?

Dear Dr. Frood: The other day my roommate and I had an argument about the difference between traditional art and modern art. What, in your opinion, is the basic difference between these two forms?

DEAR ART: The examples above should settle your argument. The portrait at left is traditional. The artist has drawn Lincoln as he actually appeared. The portrait at right is modern. As you can see, the modern artist has drawn Lincoln's great-great-grandson.

Dear Dr. Frood: My favorite brand is Lucky Strike. But unfortunately I am left-handed. Why doesn't Lucky Strike come out with cigarettes for left-handed people?

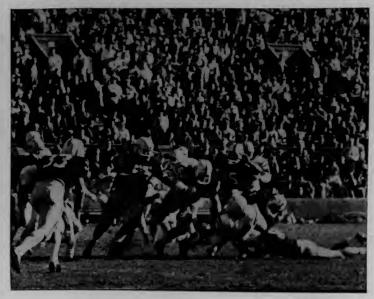

DEAR LEFTY: Left-handed Luckies are available. Simply ask for "Left-handed Luckies." They come in a white pack with a red bull's-eye. The only difference be-tween these and ordinary Luckies is that you must always smoke them while facing a mirror.

"LUCKIES ARE BETTER THAN MONEY," says Dr. Frood (who gets paid in Luckies). It's a fact that college students smoke more Luckies than any other regular. This cigarette is all cigarette—the cigarette that still tastes great. Try a pack today-it's the only thing you and Dr. Frood will ever have in common.

CHANGE TO LUCKIES and get some taste for a change!

IFC & PanHel Sell Balloons For Books At Homecoming

On Homecoming Weekend, the Interfraternity Council and the Panhellenic Council will establish a campus tradition. The members of the Councils will sell colored balloons along the parade route, at the rally, and at the game dec-orated with an Indian head in-scribed "University of Massachusetts.

The balloons will be sold as a philanthropic project to raise money for purchasing books for Goodell Library. In particular, they will buy duplicate copies of reserve and reference books al-ready owned by the library, but stocked in insufficient numbers for the large student body re-quired to use them.

The Councils urge students, alumni, and townspeople to par-ticipate in this effort. Purchases of balloons will contribute to the ever-expanding effectiveness of the University library and at the same time will add color to the Homecoming Weekend activities.

Wm. Wheeler House Dedicated Yesterday

Miss Elizabeth R. Wheeler, John Gillespie, Prof. Frank P. Rand. by RICHARD HAYNES '64 Collegian Staff Reporter

Frank Prentice Rand, Profesof English, Emeritus, was speaker at dedication cerethe speaker at dedicati monies of William Wheeler House yesterday attended by 70 people. The program opened at 3 p.m. with a general welcome extended by Joseph Del Vecchio 64, representative of Lambert '62, president of the Del Vecchio then introhouse. Del Vecchio the duced Professor Rand.

Speaks on William Wheeler

Rand outlined Wheeler's life from 1867 when he entered the Massachusetts Agricultural College until his death in 1932, "William Wheeler did more than study during his four years in college. He edited a department of an Amherst newspaper on college news and played left field on the Mass Aggie baseball team." Graduating second in his class in 1871, Wheeler, in the class ode, commented; "With a sea of life before us, as its portals open wide, our beacon casts its light upon the sky." Evidently, he did cast his light, because in 1917 he was named as a delegate to the Constitutional Convention and cited as "Concord's leading citizen." His service to the col-lege included 46 years as a trustee. Upon his retirement in 1929 as Chairman of the Board of Trustees, he was given an Honor ary Doctor of Laws Degree. It was on this occasion that presi-dent Roscoe W. Thatcher said, 'No one has ever given as long or rendered more effective service to the college, as a loyal alumnus and member of the Board of Trustees, as William Wheeler."

Christian Association Plans Play And Panel Discussion

The first program of the Christian Association, entitled "The Age of Salesmanship" begins at 7:00 Tuesday evening on the stage of Bartlett Hall.

The play, e. e. cummings' San-ta Claus, begins with a conversa-tion between Death and Santa Claus. The conversation is packed with comedy and irony. Santa Claus finds himself in a predicament: he wishes to give to the man of the 20th century but there is no one capable of receiv-ing. Death eagerly analyzes his dilemma. Evolving from this conversation is a picture of our shriveled view of knowledge, our loss of understanding and our inability to love.

Following the reading will be a panel discussion concerning the themes of the play and their application to our lives in this university. The panel will comprise Louis Greenbaum, Rev. Donald Bossart, Gail Osbaldeston and David Harrower.

The use of e. e. cummings' play in a Christian Association meeting may be new to some and surprising to others. The reason for this venture is this: too many of our 'religious' plays are so draped in outdated garb that they no longer communicate to the conditions of our time, For a play to be religious, or Christian, it is not necessary to romp around in beards, halos, and bathrobes. A play becomes religious when it deals with the fundamental problems of our existence. This play of Mr. cummings' concerns itself with such problems. So it is that the Christian Association concerns itself with this type of drama.

Readers of Santa Claus will be Ben Benoit, Nancy King, George Jones and Steve Allen.

Students and faculty are cor-dially invited to attend.

THE STATE OF THE UNIVERSITY:

'State Can Be Proud Of UMass'—Saulnier

by JACK BAPTISTA '61, Collegian Special Reporter

by JACK BAPTISTA '61, Collegion Special Reporter
"As the University of Massachusetts continues its present rapid progress in all phases of its educational facilities, the parents of Massachusetts can look with ever-increasing pride and confidence to the academic opportunities opening up to their sons and daughters" stated Representative Joseph Saulnier (R-New Bedford). He spoke as one who has personally surveyed the situation, for his daughter is a member of the junior class at UMass. He feels that his daughter is getting "an education comparable to that offered by any of the better state universities in the country". tate universities in the country'

Commenting on the capacity of the University to fulfill the needs of the rapidly increasing number of new students each year, Saulnier declared, "The term 'diploma mill' is unfortunate. I have heard it used loosely in connection with other universities, but I do not feel there is any justification for it anywhere. The educators with whom I have been in contact, namely high school principals and teachers, all hold the University in high esteem."

"Record student enrollments with the resulting problems of class sizes, faculty, housing, facilities, etc. are national in scope. They are not particular to UMass. I favor constructive legislative action designed to solve these problems."

With regard to the growing number of faculty resignations of late, Representative Saulnier stated, "The circumstances of President Mather's resignation and the reporter on faculty treasure.

Mather's resignation and the reports on faculty turnover, have left, on the whole, a negative public impression. A need is indicated for definite improvement in this area".

definite improvement in this area".

Representative Saulnier said he foresees a general expansion of all divisions of the University in the future. He hopes it continues to maintain the Agricultural School. "The University Cranberry Experimental Station, for example, affects a substantial industry in southeastern Massachusetts", he added.

Saulnier concluded, "My personal impression of UMass, its students, faculty, and educational standards is very favorable. I believe the University's efforts to fill the urgent educational needs of the young people of the Commonwealth are a high point. The major short-comings, in my opinion, stem from a failure to stimulate greater public interest and support for these efforts".

A Word To The Wise

Every so often, someone realizes that there is a gross lack of school spirit on this campus; he complains to all those who will listen, perhaps writes a letter to the editor of the Collegian, and eventually forgets about the situation -until someone else decides to drag it up again.

And every so often, the administration revokes the right of the students to observe another of the diminishing collection of school traditions. The students grumble and complain; a flood of letters pour into the editor's desk; but eventually the students resign themselves to the new restriction and the tradition is soon forgotten by all but reminiscent seniors who relate, in nostalgic tones, with eyes agleam, the wonders and delights of the "good old days."

A university possesses potential energy. It can be transformed into kinetic energy: school spirit. But such a transformation can be achieved by only one means: tradi-

Why cannot a group of young adults, in the course of year of serious study, enjoy the harmless fun of one Spring Day of psychological release?

Is it criminal for a dreamy-eyed co-ed to be serenaded when she becomes pinned? (For some alumnae, this remains their prime memory of a four-year college education!)

The administration sanctions a series of sports from basketball and swimming to football and gymnastics. Why then is it delinquent to participate in the friendly rivalry of a tug-of-war? (Is the administration merely concerned with saving the campus pond from pollution? If people are inclined to go for a dunk therein, they will do so regardless, as we observed last winter . . .)

Each fall we hold huge pep rallies. A cheerleader leaps up and roars, "WHO'S gonna win?" And the students murmur, "What difference does it make?"

And our administration still wonders why we lack school spirit . . .

Fellowship Nominations

Most of us are aware of the nation-wide shortage of qualified college teachers which has been threatening the quality of American education. This shortage is due to the phenomenal increase in the number of men and women attending college, an increase which has created a need for at least 30,000 new college teachers per year for the next ten years. Immediately after the often considerable expense of a four year college education, many students are unwilling to or cannot enter graduate schools. Very many, therefore, do not consider careers which require graduate work, such as careers in college teaching which are essential for our country's universities and colleges. In consideration of these facts various private foundations have created substantial fellowships for college seniors. The Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation is one of these organ-

The Foundation offers $1,500 fellowships for first ear graduate work leading to a career in college teaching. Outstanding college seniors and graduates who have not yet entered a liberal arts graduate school are eligible provided that they are citizens of the United States or of Canada and PROVIDED THAT THEY ARE NOMINATED FOR THE AWARD BY A COLLEGE FACULTY MEMBER. Through a careful process of selection, including a personal interview, 1000 students are finally chosen from the nominees. These are fully supported through their first year of graduate study.

The foundation primarily selects those interested in teaching careers in the humanities and social sciences. In certain cases, however, when a clear preference for college teaching is shown, candidates from the natural sciences will be considered. (Those students majoring in the sciences are urged to apply for a National Science Foundation Fellowship if they are interested.)

Nominations must be in the hands of a regional chairman no later than OCTOBER 31. The candidate must then file an information form by November 30.

Those wanting further details about these fellowships may contact Professor T. O. Wilkinson, in the Department of Sociology, Machmer Hall (Ext. 318).

We hope that our faculty will not fail to nominate all students qualified for these awards.

CONCERT REVIEW

by JUDY ST. JEAN '61

Collegian Arts Critic

Mantovani tends to be repetitious and shallow to the intelligent listener, but Monday's concert revealed great versatility. The program was organized skillfully enough to keep the audience from mental reverie. Mood music which is so commonly associated with Mantovani was amply represented in such choices as Some Enchanted Evening and Autumn Leaves; while his best entertainment and talent was displayed in the other selections such as Percussion on Parade, Scottish Rhapsody and Tania

The most interesting aspect of the concert was the sound and versatility which was produced by a tiny nucleus of woodwinds, brass, percussion, and accordion in a predominantly string orchestra. There were many subtleties and colorations produced by the use of the instruments; the Canary was one such selection using two violins to reproduce a such selection using two violins to reproduce a canary sound with the rest of the orchestra centering around them, while Mantovani displayed humorous inclinations in conducting. One solo George Swift, was outstanding as artist and composer, playing Elfriede which won loud audience ac

The concert was thoroughly enjoyable, and from the standing ovation which Mantovani received, this reviewer concludes the audience was impressed. The cage was filled to capacity with people over-flowing into the aisles. One of the unfortunate cir-cumstances was that late comers disturbed the con-cept and the conductor. cert and the conductor. At one point he said, "Where are they coming from?" This lateness may have resulted from the audience conditioning to 8:15 rather than 8:00 for commencing performances.

The most annoying condition was caused by the lighting. Setting a mood is a part of music listen-ing not to be denied especially to Mantovani; but the glaring gym lights were a constant reminder of beautiful concert hall in which we were sembled!

The concert was a success, if not intellectually at least emotionally; and we were fortunate to hear a versatile performance, professionally executed by an international orchestra

We work hard, we think hard, and we worry hard—all "for the children." And one day the son will be sitting in the bosom of his own family, and he will say, "My father was rather a tall man." And if you are floating somewhere in the ether you will say, "Is that all I get out of it? Is that all I get for the times I got up in the middle of the night to say, "Is that all I get out of it: 15 cline and for the times I got up in the middle of the night get a doctor when he was sick?"

Of course that is all you get out of it. And this is good. Reverence for the past is important, of course, but the past must not lay too heavy a hand upon the present and the future. It is good to work hard, think hard and worry hard—for the children, for ourselves; and if years later, all you get out of it is, "My mother was a good cook, too," just figure it as a bonus. Let us not worry about our obituaries. Let us only hope and pray that our children survive us.

"CHANGING TIMES" CONTESTED

Obviously his "now" is during the war against the Japanese. It is historical fact that the com-munists did just that. Any military assistance from munists did just that. Any military assistance from the Allied Torces that they could get their hands on was turned on their own people, who were, in fact, suffering war, invasion, and an inflation which had originated in US silver policy.

Earlier in his article Mr. Palter states "Chang Kai-Chek instead of confronting the Japanese on-slaught, continued his fight against the Communists. This was . . . 1931-1937."

WHAT TO DO TILL THE PSYCHIATRIST COMES

Once upon a time at the University of Virginia there was Once upon a time at the University of Virginia there was a coed named, oddly enough, Virginia University who was handsome and kindly and intelligent and ingeniously constructed and majoring in psychology. Virginia went steady with a young man on campus named, oddly enough, Oddly Enough who was supple and fair and lithe and animated and majoring in phys ed.

Virginia and Oddly enjoyed a romance that was as idyllic as a summer day, as placid as a millpond. Never did they fight a summer day, as placid as a millpond. Never did they fight— never, never, never!—because Virginia, who was majoring in psychology, did not believe in fighting. "Fighting," she often said, "settles nothing. The scientific way is to look calmly for the cause of the friction."

whenever she and Oddly were on the verge of a quarrel. she used to whip out a series of ink blot tests and they would discover the true underlying cause of their dispute and deal with it in an enlightened, dispassionate manner. Then, the irritant removed, their romance would resume its tranquil, serene, unruffled course

After six months of this sedate liaison, Oddly was so bored he could spit. He loved Virginia well enough, but he also believed that people in love ought to fight now and then. "It opens the pores," he said. "And besides, it's so much fun making up afterwards."

But Virginia would not be provoked into a quarrel. One night Oddly tried very hard. "Hey," he said to her, "your nose looks like a banana, and your ears look like radar antenna, and your face looks like a pan of worms."

"My goodness, we're hostile tonight!" said Virginia cheerfully and whipped 120 Rorschach cards out of her reticule. "Come," she said.

ne said, "let us examine your psychic apparatus."

Oddly tried again. "You're fat and dumb and disagreeable," he said, "and you'll be bald before you're thirty."

"Hmm," said Virginia thoughtfully and lit a cigarette. "This sounds like an anxiety neurosis with totemism, anagogic trauma, and a belt in the back."

"I hate you," said Oddly. "I hate your looks and your clothes and your toenails and your relatives and the cigarettes you noke."

"Now, hold on, buster!" cried Virginia, her eyes crackling, er color mounting, her nostrils aflame. "Just keep a civil her color mounting, her nostrils aflame. "Just keep a civil tongue in your stupid head when you talk about Marlboro! Nobody's knocking that filter, that flavor, that pack or flip-top box while there's breath in my body! It's a full-flavored smoke, it's a doozy, it's a dilly, it's a gas—and anybody who says a word against it gets this."

By "this" Virginia meant a series of combinations to the head and liver, which she now delivered to Oddly and turned on her heel and stormed away.

Oddly brought her down with a flying tackle. "I love you with all my heart," he said.

"And Marlboro?" said she.

"And Mariboror same sine."

"And Mariboro even more," said he.

And they kissed and plaited love knots in one another's hair and were married at Whitsuntide and smoked happily ever after.

Eldon Caves Explored By UMass Club

Members of the Outing Club, including four girls, braved the icy waters of Massachusetts' largest cave, Eldon French in West Stockbridge on Sunday, October 2.

It was the first time most of the group had ever been spelunk-ing. As they crawled inside the cave, since most of the travelling had to be done on hands and knees, they found themselves in an icy underground stream. They proceeded through a series of small waterfalls. It was a tight squeeze for some to traverse the narrower places.

Upon leaving the cave, one member was seen to bow down on his knees and promise to go to church every Sunday and say his daily prayers.

Leach Songbirds Capture Prize In Dormitory Sing

Last Tuesday night, the gym of the Woman's Physical Educa-tion Building resounded with song as over six hundred girls participated in the annual Inter-Dorm Sing. The climax of the evening came as the judges announced that Leach House had won the coveted plaque. Leach, under its director, Linda Burnham '63, had sung "Sons of the Valley" as their required UMass. song and "The Sloop John B", song and The Sloop sonn B, recently made famous by the Kingston Trio. In character for their song, the girls from Leach wore dungarees, white blouses, and colorful neck scarves.

four University songs, chosen from a hat, and one of their own selection by a conductor from the dorm. The conductors were: Arnold-Jane Crasco '63; Crabtree-Charlotte Kimball '62; Dwight-Elaine Carlson '63; Hamlin-Carol Jones '61; Johnson-Ann Shutty '61; Knowlton-Gail Osbaldeston '61; Leach-Linda Burnham '63; Lewis-Judy St. Jean '61; Mary Lyon-Dottie Lowe '63 and Thatcher-Paula Turco '63. After all the downer had not formed. all the dorms had performed, Ann Shutty led the group in song while waiting for the judges' decision.

Mrs. Alviani later commented that 50% of the judging was based on the percentage of freshmen present as compared to the number of freshmen in the dorm, 25% on spirit and originality, and 25% on musical quality. She also said that it was very enjoyable and wished that she could give them all first place.

AFROTC Basic Cadets, met Thurs. in the Council Chambers. Weekend trips to three Air Force Bases were announced. The bases to be visited are Loring AFB, Me., Plattsburg AFB, N.Y., and Pease AFB, N.H. The cadets will fly to these bases from Westover.

Entertainment at future meetings will include an officer from Westover who will speak on Project Mercury. This is a project whereby the NASA hopes to orbit a man around the earth, preferably before the Russians.

Following the business meeting, an Air Power series film entitled "Luftwaffe" showing the German Army, supported by the Luftwaffe, as it swept through Poland, Belgium, and France, was shown.

In addition to its own activities, the ACS sponsors the Flying Redmen Drill Team. This team has won the New England Air Force Competition six times in the past seven years, including last year when it downed UVermont by % of a point. In national competition, the Flying Redmen placed twenty-fourth out of more than 450 teams.

Here's the new Chevy Corvair for '61 with a complete line of complete thrift cars.

To start with, every Corvair has a budgetpleasing price tag. And Corvair goes on from there to save you even more. With extra miles per gallon . . . quicker-thanever cold-start warmup so you start saving sooner . . . a new extra-cost optional heater that warms everyone evenly. Riding along with this extra economy: more room inside for you, more room up front for your luggage (sedans and coupes have almost 12% more usable trunk space).

And our new wagons? You'll love them—think they're the greatest thing for families since houses. The Lakewood Station Wagon does a man-sized job with cargo, up to 68 cubic feet of it. The Greenbrier Sports Wagon you're going to have to see—it gives you up to 175.5 cubic feet of space for you and your things.

The domestic program of the two candidates was the fourth in a series of lectures given by Senator Flanders in the Council Chambers of the S.U., Wednesday at 4:00. The change in scheduled at 4:00. The change in scheduled topic from foreign relations to domestic programs was made because the difficulties at the United Nations leave some for-eign relations in question.

Thus far in his lectures, Flanders has tried to be completely objective. Now, admittedly, a certain amount of the critical Republican entered his speech

According to Senator Flanders, Kennedy has tied the domestic

By this, he has endeavored to tie By this, he has endeavored to tie himself to Roosevelt's historical politics in the domestic program. "Kennedy seems to imply," stated Flanders, "that he wishes to be the successor of Ex-President Roosevelt." What, exactly, is Kennedy trying to inherit?

"The Roosevelt administration had three high points, excluding the war. There was one success, one failure and one calamity." With these words, Senator Flanders proceeded to outline the (Continued on page 4)

Hic, Hike, Hoc

Although those spirits of inebriating sorts no longer manifestly play a part in the UM campus social-ties, we students may find delight in Spirits of two other kinds. With the Dying-to-Win Spirit, the bandstanders can gusto the football team into a great game Saturday. And with the purchase of a balloon at tonight's parade, all of us can boost the Spirit of "intellectuosity." Back the IFC this weekend in the campaign for new books and know that the Spirit gives pep and zest to another game—the game of seeking knowledge. If your balloon pops, get another!

We Meet The President

The student body will have its first opportunity to see and hear the president at tonight's rally.

While this cannot be considered an official convocation introducing the president since he is expected to say no more than a few words, it is probably the only time the students will get to see him this semester.

It was unfortunate that the president could not assume his duties until school had been in session for two weeks. Nothing could be done about this delay, but why it has taken nearly two weeks for the student body to meet the president is inexcusable.

Perhaps the administration didn't feel that the student body was important enough to take an hour of the president's time. This is rather unlikely since past policy has given full recognition to the importance of a good studentadministration relationship.

Perhaps it was felt that the students weren't interested in the man who has become the head of their university. South College has no right to make this assumption, which is quite absurd anyway.

Perhaps the new president felt that since he was not in a position to make a "State of the University" address, he had nothing of value to say to the students. This is reasonably valid, until one considers that this obviously has not been a consideration with freshman convocations.

Whatever happened to our formal address from the new president, it is quite plain that somebody in South College really fouled up. Practically everything about the president's arrival was completely disorganized, the responsibility of which rests squarely upon the shoulders of the administration

First Amendment

New York Times, Wed., Oct. 5. 1960) Too frequently in the past Congressional committees seeking to preserve the security of the United States have failed to understand the meaning of the First Amendment, confusing dissent with disloyalty, criticism with subversion. That was McCarthyism, which has declined but has not yet died. Too frequently in the present do we still see evidence of the same mentality, in both the Senate Internal Security subcommittee and its counterpart, the House Un-American Activities Committee.

At the present moment the Internal Security group is the more obvious offender. It is attempting to force the scientist Linus Pauling to reveal the names of persons who helped collect 11,000 signatures to a 1958 petition urging an international agreement to stop testing nuclear weapons -something that the committee apparently feels had a subversive tinge to it at the U.N. then, although the United States Government is pursuing the same objective at Geneva now. Dr. Pauling says that to make public the names of those who helped circulate the petition might lead to "reprisals." Whether or not his fears are justified, it is evident that the committee is pursuing its usual policy of harassment of suspected Left-Wingers and dissenters in its pursuit of Dr. Pauling.

The mentality of the Senate committee is well illustrated by another matter that has recently come to light. This was its degrading action last spring in questioning Kenneth Tynan, the British drama critic who was then visiting this country, about his views on Cuba and about the script of a television show he had helped produce in England voicing the opinions of a number of well-known American "dissenters." To suggest, as the questioning did, that there was something wrong in Mr. Tynan's holding political opinions contrary to those of the President of the United States makes the committee appear even more ridiculous than it is and-something much more important-undermines American democratic principles.

And-just to remind ourselves that all the infringements of personal liberty are not committed by Congressional committees but sometimes are committed by their state counterparts-Dr. Willard Uphaus is still in a New Hampshire jail.

Ben-Hur

Ben-Hur has clattered into Springfield, embellished with all the trappings of a spectacular: gar-gantuan buildings, costumes as endless as the tramp-ing columns of Roman soldiers, the Roman way of life a little bloodier than usual, and the screen a little bigger to contain all of this. In the midst of this splendor, the picture attempts a serious study of personal revenge, while at the same time it en-deavors to be a "tale of the Christ" as the great, gold letters at its beginning proclaim.

On the contrary, it is the struggle of a protagonist, Judah Ben-Hur, against a childhood-friend-turned-enemy, Messala, a rising young Roman ruler. Ben-Hur is an amiable young Jewish prince, occasionally showing rebellious tendencies against his Roman overseers, but never endangering his own neck Massala has become a Roman overseers. neck. Messala has become a Roman-organization-man: indoctrinated and ambitious to the extreme of using his former friend against the Jews. Ben-Hur's stoic refusal to sell his people down the river is cause for the hand of friendship to turn into a fist Messala shows his disapproval of Ben Hur by arresting him at the first drop of a tile and soon Ben Hur finds himself chained to the galley of a ship as a condemned slave. His rise from the galley to a victory march down the rose-strewn streets of Rome is rapid, once he saves the life of the ship's commander. While enjoying the grandeur that was Rome, he picks up the art of chariot-racing, and soon it's back to Judea to challenge Messala.

The chariot race itself has not been exaggerated; an incredible scene and one of the most realistic ever filmed. These nine minutes of chills and spills are worth the price of admission.

The photography is excellent and the sweeping scenes are well-integrated; the focus never strays far from the hero. There are a few human touches in this epic, and occasionally the characters break out of their stilted roles. The Arab trader whose horses Ben-Hur drives to victory is a wonderfully human character, and his humor helps relieve some of the tension of the race itself. Both Ben-Hur and Messala have moments when they show some depth, but these are unfortunately few. The scenes in which Christ appears are conventional and reshear the scenes in which Christ appears are conventional and perhaps to carefully handled, for they are reduced to mere stage

But Ben-Hur is perhaps the best spectacular ever produced. It is never-tiring, and never fails to amaze, startle, or horrify. As a serious motion pic-ture it has failed, but it is a magnificent failure.

A Common Bondage

To the Editor:

In response to the thought-provoking and unfortunately true article in the Collegian of Oct. 5, may we say that the first thing that we noticed, as freshmen, here at the University was the lack of enthusiasm among the students of this institution. This fact was glaringly evident at the football ral-lies where the football team itself comprised more lies where the football team itself comprised more than half of the upperclassmen present. However, the students may not be wholly to blame for this. It is possible that the administration is partly to blame for lack of enthusiasm and general apathetic regard for the university.

What the students need, in our opinion, is some-thing to create a common bond in which all are in-terested. The current football team is a step in the right direction but tradition would help immensely. right direction but tradition would help immensely. The first section of last year's Handbook relating past traditions at the University was of particularly great interest to us. Where are they or their evolved counterparts now? I know of no traditions maintained by the University students and upheld by the administration. Almost any activity that could have evolved into a tradition seems to have been voted out by the administration, labeling it irresponsible.

As stated in the article by J. H. D., the University is composed of young adults. Why does not the administration treat them as such? Let the students make some of their own decisions.

One of the primary functions of a University is to other the primary functions of a University is to educate the students. To make of them mature men and women, capable of accepting responsibility and of making intelligent decisions, decisions in the social and moral fields as well as the fields of business. How can this be accomplished if the administration makes almost all of these decisions for the students?

As you know, the University is in the process of rapid expansion or growth. Will this growth result in the formation of a campus where a person has enthusiasm only for what happens in his or her immediate group? The best way to grow is with an increase both in the size of the campus and in our pride and enthusiasm for our school.

We are now experiencing the first part, which may be the easiest, but the second part, a growth in the spirit for the school will not come about on its own it needs a catalyst its own-it needs a catalyst.

Another point may be mentioned briefly. If there Another point may be mentioned brieny. It there is no tradition at a school, how can the alumni be expected to remember their alma mater, at times when it needs them most. If they see nothing to remind them of their own years spent here, how can they have pride in their school and enthusiasm for its betterment?

We believe that the administration should relax its controls over the students, who will in the future become alumni, and allow this pride and enthusiasm to grow and flourish. When the students are able to make their own decisions, they will undoubtedly call on the administration for advice.

To expand successfully we need to advertise. The best way to advertise is to have a reputation and the best reputation is spirit for our institution. The best way to promote enthusiasm among the students is to share a common goal, This in our mind is TRA-

If anyone, student or faculty, has a solution to ampus of apathy, we are sure many students here would appreciate your contribution.

Intrusion of Rights

To the Editor.

A few minutes ago an officer of the campus police came into my room with a list of objects which, I imagine, were in my room illegally in the eyes of housing. In my case these "illegal objects" were signs. I don't know how housing uncovered my little cache of contraband goods, but this isn't the first time that housing's little was how some same and the cache of the campus police of the cache first time that housing's little men have come across these obnoxious objects. Coach Studley Hopes To Shatter UConn Jinx

(Reprinted from New York Herald Tribune)

The last time the University of gave Harvard very few chances Massachusetts had a capacity crowd (11,000) for a home game was in 1956 for a game with the University of Connecticut. The home team was beaten, 71-6, and quarterback, John McCormick has no one really cared very much about football on the campus at Amherst thereafter as the Redmen lost many more than they Connecticut, last beaten by a Yankee Conference foe in 1955, visits the Massachusetts campus again this Saturday and another sell-out crowd is anticipated. But the score will not be 71-6.

The UMass team this time is undefeated after three games, the conquerer of Harvard (plus Cornell in a pre-season scrimmage).

conquerer of Harvard (plus Cornell in a pre-season scrimmage), and football is all the talk around the fast-growing state university.

Much of the credit goes to Charles B. (Chuck) Studley who at 31 must be one of the youngest head coaches in the country. Studley, who for five years was the line coach at his alma mater, Illinois, under Ray Eliot, has done a convincing job of selling himself and the game to an indifferent university since his arrival last spring. Right now he is on top of his little world.

Speaking of the upset of Har-

Speaking of the upset of Harvard last Saturday, he said, "The hardest job I've had is to sell these boys on themselves. I hope they've learned now they can be as good as they want to be."

Studley leads from faith. He thought his team could beat Harvard—did anyone else?—and he believes this could be the year Connecticut finally loses the Yankee Conference title. "We might be the team to do it," he Massachusetts, which last had Massachusetts, which last had a winning season in 1952, had lost six straight to Connecticut. A year ago the UMass record was 3-5-1 under coach Charley O'Rourke and the present squad is built around 19 lettermen. How does Studley explain the turnabout?

"Just hard work. I'm not one of those coaches who works hard to prepare pre-game oratory. The best possible preparation is a week of work on the practice field."

Another explanation might be the instruction on defensive foot-ball, a phase of the game ignored here in recent years. UMass and the Crimson never did complete a pass in the 27-12 defeat. Studley claims his team lacks that although a 215-pound quarterback, John McCormick has completed 25 of 41 pass attempts (seven of 11 against Harvard), but the offense is not geared to the air game. Rather it is a ball-control attack, stressing the four-yard gain between the tackles. yard gain between the tackles. In every contest so far UMass has had about 20 more offensive plays than its opponent. Studley calls his offense "a smorgasboard T" because it incorporates a little of everything.

The team is not quite two deep The team is not quite two deep—the sophomore center, Matt Collins, played 60 minutes against Harvard. Another sophomore, Sam Lussier, is the notable running back. A third, end Paul Majeski, blocked a Harvard punt when he was not supposed to ("Darndest thing I ever saw," said the coach). And a fourth yearling, Tom Brophy, is a starting guard. Everybody else is a letter man. letter man.

And everybody on the squad is a resident of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. The word in New England has been that U-Mass gets the second-best native high school players but, because the state is so rich a football recruiting ground, the second best are plenty good.

In fact it was forecast in many circles that this university could become the one to challenge Connecticut's dominant position in the Yankee Conference, provided the new coach was a good one.

After just three games, Chuck Studley's boys' are looking the Connecticuts right in the eye.

Treasurer Recommends Pay Raises

State House legislative corridors buzzed today over the rec-ommendation of retiring State Treasurer John F. Kennedy of Canton that legislators' salaries be increased to $10,000 a year. Currently, the House committee on bills in third reading is holding a bill to up the salary level from $5200 to $6500 until the attitude of the Senate, reported against the measure, and the Governor, who has demanded a roll call, can be verified.

The state treasurer, who can-not succeed himself after serving three consecutive terms and lost in the battle for the Democratic nomination for Governor, pointed out that "there is a groundswell of complaint" against the proof complaint" against the proposed boost but he still favors it.

He also would give the Governor, now paid $20,000 a year, a salary of $200,000 annually which

T.V. Commercials Require Big Money—Large Staffs

Hollywood (UPI) — If you're ne of the millions of TV viewers who are getting so they look forward to the commercial that interrupts their favorite program, you'll be interested learn it isn't an accident.

"It is nothing unusual to have one-minute commercials used during a 30-minute program cost more to produce than the pro-gram itself," said Chapin.

Chapin's company, Parapick Service Corp., does nothing in the way of thinking up commer-cial ideas or writing the scripts. Its sole job is to take the ideas of an advertising agency and put them on film.

"Right now we're starting work on a series of eight one-minute spots," he said. "They will cost spots," he said. "They will cost 664,000, plus the cost of as many prints as the agency buys." Chapin said the most expen-sive commercial his company turned out was a two-minute color job for Chevrolet which cost $25,000.

"It takes about four days to prepare for one day of shooting for good commercials," he said, "then it takes about three weeks to complete the job, adding the effects and sound."

"For a one-minute commercial,"

Chapin said, "there are 35 men on his crew plus an editing staff of four. This does not include the cast."

"Then there is an optical staff of seven, if needed for such items as faders, and the crew employed at the laboratory where our film is sent to be handled."

Chapin is a native of Springfield, Mass.

Index Staff Needs More Personnel

Anyone interested in working in the Index Staff report to the Index Office on Monday, October 10 at 4 p.m. One of the goals of this year's Index is to build a staff from which next year's various section editors may be chosen. There is room for personnel in all areas, especially business, literary, and typing. Freshmen and sophomores are encouraged to attend.

SYSTEMS ENGINEERING CAN START HERE...

OR HERE... OR HERE... OR HERE... OR HERE...

If you are completing studies in engineering, economics, math, science or business, have maintained high averages and are interested in a rewarding professional career leading to management, IBM Systems Engineering may be just the career

What does an IBM Systems Engineer do? He studies problems in industry, science, business and government, and then or-ganizes the most modern electronic data processing techniques and machine systems to solve them. He works at the source and with top executives in the organizations concerned.

The problems are fascinating and exciting—and include automation of: process control and manufacturing operations, inventory control document preparation, satellite tracking, highway planning, weather forecasting, and complete business control systems for utilities, transportation, banking and insurance, to name but a few. New techniques of automatic data processing are making headline news almost daily

Your present training, combined with one of the most comprehensive training programs conducted by any company, may put you in a position to join this fast-growing new profession with virtually an unlimited future. Openings will exist in all principal U.S. cities. See your Placement Director for additional information about IBM and to arrange for an interview. Or feel free to write or call me:

This red, itching eruption of the skin, especially on the hands, has been "loosely attributed" to these new cleaning agents, said Dr. Raymond R. Suskind, professor of industrial medicine and dermatology.

Commonly used dishwashing and laundry cleansers rarely are the primary factor in the disease, a nine-year study showed. When other factors of the household routine were removed, doctors found that daily immersion of hands in soaps and detergents was not harmful.

Hospitalized patients with skin diseases and others with normal skin were studied to determine the effect of cleansers on both. Results showed the products "rarely provoke allergic reactions" nor is their alkalinity democracy. damaging.

Emotional adjustment, previous skin problems, winter weather, and chemical agents such as food juices, dyes and solvents were listed among probable causes of the disease.

The medical department began the study, Dr. Suskind said, be-cause for years "soap dermatitis" was a "glib and frequent diagno-sis for a variety of skin problems of the hands."

Wes Roberts can tell you:

"THERE'S NO CEILING FOR A SELF-STARTER IN THE TELEPHONE BUSINESS"

When Wes Roberts was nearing the end of his senior year at San Jose State College, he was looking for a job with a wide open future. He found it when he joined Pacific Telephone in San Francisco.

Here's how Wes tells it: "I remember one of my first jobs. The boss said, 'Wes, I want you to work out a plan showing where we'll need new field operating centers to keep up with Northern California's growth over the next 10 years.' I didn't know whether I was more happy

Wes didn't tell us (but his boss did) that he handled the report like a pro. And today, as a division supervisor, he's holding down a key telephone job.

Wes Roberts' story is not unique in the Bell Telephone Companies. The telephone business is growing fast-and men are needed who can grow just as fast.

Wes can tell you: "We get good training. But no one nurses you along. We hire managers -not errand boys. So far as I can see, there's no ceiling for a self-starter in this business."

If you're a guy like Wes Roberts-if you like to bite off more than you can chew and then chew it - you'll want to visit your Placement Office for literature and additional information.

"Our number one aim is to have in all management jobs the most vital, intelligent, positive and imaginative men we can possibly find."

Not only those around him, but also big business leaders were convinced business leaders were convinced that ours was a mature economy. Two organizations were founded to end the depression, the National Recovery Administration and the Works Progress Administration. The N.R.A., on the assumption that expensive and extreme competition caused the depression, proposed that business and labor get together and draw up codes of good practice. However, these codes had to be passed through legal channels bepassed through legal channels be-fore being approved, and general-ly came out slanted for government control.

The first should be increased wages to the workers, the second should be reduced prices of goods, and the third should be more money put back into business. Capital Outlay Program Delays House And Senate

One of the major hitches to an early prorogation is money. For example the House sent to the Senate a capital outlay program totalling $49 million, as compared wth the $56 million recommended by the Governor and the $23.9 million recommended by the governor and the $23.9 million recommended by the House committee on ways and means.

Bank night in the House, as one Republican member described the session at which the lower branch more than doubled the capital outlay, saw everybody rolling logs for everybody. It was an excellent example of the theory that, if you scratch my back, I'll scratch yours.

It was precipitated by the majority floor leader, Rep. Cornelius F. Kiernan of Lowell, who, in two motions adopted without difficulty, added millions to the capital outlay for two Lowell educational institutions.

The capital outlay is now be-fore the Senate committee on ways and means which takes a ways and means which takes a slightly different attitude. Sen. William D. Fleming (D-Worcester), the chairman, has maintained publicly, that he will not approve any capital outlay program until financing has been provided.

With a bond issue of $49 million, the financing alone takes money. And a bond issue requires a two-thirds vote in each branch at the enactment stage.

Current revenue cannot fi-nance such expenditures as would be required, for example, to build just one building at the Univer-sity of Massachusetts.

The Commonwealth can borrow money at a low rate of interest, even though its bonded indebted(Continued on page 3)

Selection Of Junior Justice In November

by JAMES E, MULCAHY and ALLAN COHEN '63

Editor's note: This is the first half of a two-part series review-ing the organization of the Men's Judiciary. The second half will appear in Friday's COLLEGIAN. Men's Judiciary, the male undergraduates' student court, is dergraduates' student court, is currently in need of a new member. In November a member of the junior class will be selected to fill the post. According to the By-Laws of the UMass Constitution, he will be selected by the Justices and an equal number of male Senators from the ber of male Senators from the Men's Affairs Committee.

On the day prescribed each candidate will be interviewed and given an intensive questioning on his knowledge of the Constitu-tion and his views on various theoretical, ethical problems that arise here on the campus. The Justices, under the chairmanship of Mike Kleinerman '61, deliber-ating with the Senators eliminatte the candidates until finally one is chosen. "A man is elected to Men's Judiciary" says Klein-erman "for what he stands, not who stands for him."

The Men's Judiciary was ganized in the Fall of 1948 when the groups governing Men and Women combined to form the Joint Student Government Association. For the first five years, ciation. For the first five years, a more or less inactive group handled only parking violations. This unsatisfactory arrangement was revamped in '52-'53 with a rethinking of the area of jurisdiction. The dropping of "tickets" allowed Men's Judiciary to pick up cases of general misconduct and their scope and attempts. duct and their scope and strength has increased continuously to a point where it is now more powerful than those of Syracuse, Delaware, and all of the Yan-Con belaware, and all of the tall-con-schools in the types of serious cases handled. The power of our Men's Judiciary and Student Sen-ate was emphasized at a confer-ence of these schools last Spring.

According to Dave Clancey '63, the only sophomore member of the board, "The role of Men's Judiciary is to serve as an in-termediary between the Dean of Men and the students . " Each week the Chief Justice discusses all the current cases with the Dean, without mentioning names, to decide where they will be handled. Men's Judiciary can get a variety of cases excluding morals and cheating. A good number of the cases are violations of our past president's memo on liquor. "Because we are students and realize the problems of students," states Joe Harrington '61, "we are more impartial than the faculty and can therefore do a better job."

The way the Men's Judiciary handles a case and their requirements for membership will be discussed in the next issue.

Collegian - Sponsored Class In Journalism To Start Tues.

A Collegian-sponsored class in reporting and news writing will begin at 4 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 11, in the SU.

The class, supported by Student Activities Tax Fund, will be taught by Phillip Keohane, chief of the United Press Internation al Bureau in Springfield. He holds a Master's degree in jour-nalism from Columbia Univer-sity. This is his third year as instructor in the class.

The class will consist of 12 lectures over a six-week period, and will include writing assignments as well as lectures. They will be taught at 4 p.m. every Tuesday and Thursday.

While there is no obligation while there is no obligation for those attending the classes to join the Collegian, freshmen members of the newspaper are strongly urged to attend the classes. English majors in particular are encouraged to attend the classes according to Professor Maxwell Goldberg, head of the English department.

The President Promises . . .

Last week in an early morning interview with the University President, John W. Lederle, three members of the Collegian staff were able to discuss the plans, problems, and policy confronting the man in the top post on campus.

As the president indicated during his remarks at the rally Friday night, he wants to rest his feet comfortably on University soil before undertaking any major administrative-legislative business. He is planning to feel his way around for some time . . . just to find out what makes the University tick (money) and what our problems are.

In disclosing his outlook and attitude concerning a good student body relationship, President Lederle certainly deserves and gets from us a pat on the back. His statement, that he would be the "most accessible" president the University has ever had, received a grand cheer from the students at the Homecoming rally. During the Collegian interview the president had commented that he would be opposed to any intervention in student ideas and would hesitate before invading any of our rights and responsibilities as students. He continued: "I may think an act or statement is foolish on your part, but I will fight for your right to say what you think."

Although President Lederle has not yet been able to make many or any solid formal statements, we have learned that there will not be any radical changes made here at UMass-at least for the moment. Whether this should or should not be taken apprehensively remains to be seen.

KNOWLEDGE OR ENCHANTMENT?

by GENEVIEVE REALL '63

In a world where utilitarianism is one of the most emphasized approaches to daily living, it is difficult to realize that usefulness, approaches to daily living, it is difficult to realize that usefulness, economy, or practicality should not be good in themselves. They are but dispensers of the mechanical and routine tasks of life so that man may concentrate on what is primarily significant—namely, himself. In his desire for the "better things of life" he has frequently lost sight of the ends and has become unnecessarily absorbed with the means. This is popularly labelled materialism. Yet, he thinks he is still gaining those "better things of life" when he is in reality only acquiring things which are not, ultimately, of life in the broad sense, but of his own narrow invention. Unhappily, this distorted approach to realizing what is intrinsically good has seeped into the academic world where mechanization threatens.

As almost universally stated by students, the aim of going to college is to "get an education." Here again, people suppose they are only being exposed to the means, the tools of their objective. Knowledge unrelated to living experience is meaningless. What is popularly termed "education" is meaningless in itself. Before students have termed "education" is meaningiess in itself. Defore scudents have "got" something, they must give something. This second element is appreciation. Another word might be wonder. It should precede or accompany cognition, for it is an understanding of the heart. It is good to know the nervous system of the frog only if we experience, say, a perception of intentive design, universality or some such quality that appeals to us as humans, as creatures who sense the curiosity of existence. No knowledge can ever be good for us unless it is assimilated in this fashion. Otherwise, what is called "learning" be a kind of mental residue that can, at best, furnish chit-chat for cock tail parties. To be truly educated is to be truly aware—and awareness ore than factual knowledge—it is also a sense of the magical, of "Education" must also color our perspective, our attitudes, our philosophy if you will. In the end, knowledge is valuable insofar as it enhances our private plane of experience—gives the richness of humor, pathos, and beauty to existence. With every plane of experience there is a singular outlook, a window of one's consciousness. This is, in part, the kind of awareness I mean. It is individual and subjective. To the objection that the intellect finds truth to be good in itself, that there need be no emotive, personal aspect involved, I answer after Keats: "Truth is Beauty." What is true is innately good to us because it strikes a deep chord. Who shall say what that chord is? We can only know that there is something both refreshing and enchanting about the discovery of a truth. It is a missing piece out of the puzzle of our general understanding. It entrances us because we have made it our own and it will be a part of us, somehow, forever.

Therefore, let us not come ambitiously to the classroom with the paltry aim of a distant lucrative career, with the conceited one of prestige, or with the pathetic one of bored conformity. Instead, if we are human enough, we shall find something both clarifying and sensitizing about knowledge: there is clarification of that private window of consciousness and sensitizing to the variety and color of living. And, if we are blessed, we might even be inspired.

I'm telling you they're mongrelizing our scho-lasticism. It's become increasingly evident in recent weeks that there is a growing animosity between the residents and the "commutes." Real bitterness! Now, residents and the "commutes." Real bitterness: Now, if we knew their political and religious beliefs we'd have reason to hate them...

They descend upon the campus everyday, resembling the Mongol hordes. Commuters nothing... they ought to be called the Huns. This is no exaggeration. They even refer to their senior senator Don Croteau as "Attila." The difficult part about it Don Croteau as "Attila." The united part about it is that he takes it seriously. During the Olympics last month, everytime someone near Don mentioned Rome, he'd shake his head despondently and say,

"I knew I shouldn't have let Leo talk me out of it."

It wasn't too bad when all we had were the commutes from Springfield, 'Hamp, and Granby(schist?). We could spot them quite easily enough . . . usually driving a Stop & Shop truck or wearing one of those green smocks they use at the checkout counter in Kresge's. But in the last few years, with the industrialization of Springfield (thanks to Tommy O'Connor) it's almost impossible to tell what a commuter looks like by his wearing apparel. Sweat shirt, continental cut, madras jacket . . . there is no standardized dress for selling narrotics.

I mentioned Tommy O'Connor a minute ago. For those of you interested in Tom (although O'Connor fans would prefer the latter phrase read—"for those of you interested in the salvation of manifold"), by will appear on our assumption this Sunday. kind"), he will appear on our campus this Sunday. The rally is expected to be pretty radical in so far as O'Connor fans are paralleled with those of the late Jimmy Dean . . . you know, the type who would have given up their young, innocent and promising lives and taken his place behind the wheel that day if only he could have been spared, etc. O'Connor himself, it's rumored, has been to see "Rebel Without A Cause" 247 times. But we're digressing... There are those on this campus who feel this animosity so strongly that they want the "commutes" to be isolated on the island in the middle of the

to be isolated on the island in the middle of the campus pond and name this segregated terrain Molokai. Then when the Commuters found it necessary to visit the bookstore, a Maroon Key and Scroll would be assigned to walk in advance of them, ringing a bell as a warning of their presence, crying "Unclean . . . unclean . . ."

The weird part about it is that these people have a morbid fear of being feral and, knowing of their own intellectual isolation, experience a moral and physical anguish whenever they see a new dormitory go up. There was this one returning student, who go up. There was this one returning student, who upon his arrival on campus in September, fell to his knees weeping in front of Hills North and angrily threw his Esso credit card into the dust. Later, as he was helped to his feet by a passing housemother (just coming back from Dickinson Hall and her ROTC course—German Shepherd Grooming 51), he consoled himself with the words, "I didn't want to live there anyway; you probably catch athlete's foot with that many guys using one shower."

And are they cliquish! This "clan" would put Frank, Dean, and Sammy to shame. No mixing with the outside world is allowed. If a "commute" is discovered dating a dorm girl, he is immedial labeled an apostate. But the cardinal sin—if I found sitting in the Hatch or using the library, home town's hook is usually taken off the riders bulletin board. The worst!

Correction!

To the P.M.S.:

Sir, you are of course quite right in asserting that Chiang Kai-Shek did indeed fight against the Japanese during W.W.II. My principal point of contention, however, was that from 1931-1937 he continued his fight against the communists instead of confronting the Japanese.

However, sir, when I referred to the "united front" policy which occurred in Moscow, I explicitly stated that this was in 1935. Keep this in mind, sir: 1935. To pursue this further, sir, I will now quote

"It was the communists, Mike, who did not truly fight the Japanese in W.W.II. 'Moscow policy' always dicates communist attempts to seize control of a people weakened by defense against exterior forces or by internal revolution. Here they were successful."

Bearing in mind the previous quote, sir, and especially your phrase, "Moscow policy," and in the sentence, the word "here" (obviously referring to the Chinese Revolution), I present to you the follast sentence, the word lowing facts:

when General Marshall returned to the United States he issued, in January of 1947, his well-known out to the President on the troubles of China in which he stated that there was no "significant aid" report to the President on the troubles of China in which he stated that there was no "significant aid" from Russia to the Chinese Communists. That he said this, sir, is historical fact.

It is, however, of further significance that you connected the phrase, "Moscow policy" with the Chin-

It is, nowever, of further significance that you connected the phrase, "Moscow policy" with the Chinese Revolution, for as you know, in 1947, the Truman Doctrine was issued. One could say that this doctrine was more or less a "carte blanche" to any country which claimed to be under pressure either from Russia, or its own communists. What I am getting at is this, sir: Surely, one who fights against communists is not necessarily worthy of our support merely because of this. Indeed, the suppression of the left has been carried on by corrupt men such as Mr. Rhee and Generalissimo Franco. Our state department has supported these men and look at the results:

Election riots in South Korea with a subsequent nose dive of our prestige in Asia.

Condemnation of Franco by almost all the respectable powers of the world.

Questionable military trials in Formosa with the ever present possibility of out and out scandal.

3. Questionable military trials in Formosa with the ever present possibility of out and out scandal. Indeed, sir, Chiang was a revered war leader of China, indeed, all of China. It is also possible that General Marshall could have eventually effected a reconciliation based on the Chinese moderates, whom Marshall called a "splendid group of men." It is unfortunate that after the initial unsuccessful confrontation of General Marshall and the feuding Chinese, the Truman Doctrine proved too tempting and the Kuomintang, reassured by U.S. policy, carried on with the civil war. Unfortunately, as you know, they lost and subsequently moved to our 51st state, Formosa.

However, sir, there is another thing in which I believe you to be absolutely correct. That is when you refer to the communists having killed 20 million people in consolidating their revolution—although, I believe that Mr. Luce and Mr. Hearst would disagree with you on this.

According to Albert W. Purvis, Dean of Education at UMass, there will be 45 elementary and 56 secondary student teachers placed in schools throughout Massachusetts beginning Nov. 1.

MA

These student teachers are taking an education course known as the "block". This consists of eight weeks of classes on campus and eight week of student-teaching in either elementary or high schools in the surrounding area. Because only 12 credits are given for the education block, some students have one or more courses on campus. Dean Purvis does not advise this. "There is too much work involved in preparing for these classes and correcting papers. A student should take papers. A student should take six courses in one semester rather than one during the education block," he stated.

Begins Chats With Faculty

John Blackmore, head of the Department of Agricultural Eco-Department of Agricultural Economics at Stockbridge College, led the discussion at the first of a series of "Fireside Chats", put on by the Alpha Zeta Society, on Thursday evening in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union

The purpose of the discussion groups, as stated by Blackmore, is "primarily an opportunity for bull sessions on career opportunities in agriculture."

This week the business side of agriculture was considered. Among some of the personal problems discussed and tentatively worked out were concerned with course requirements, foreign job oppportunities as well as local opportunities, and the difference in job opportunities for graduating students with a Bachelor of Science degree and those with a Bachelor of Vocational Agriculture degree.

In discussing the cycle of many Stockbridge students, Blackmore pointed out that many come from agricultural high schools without the requirements to be enrolled in the University, so they go to Stockbridge for a year. Those who do well are allowed to apply to the University if they are able to pass the basic requirements examinations.

BLOCKED PUNT

Midway through the third quarter John Contoulis blocked John McCormick's fourth down punt and UConn recovered on the UM 16. Three plays later Pete Barbarito slashed off ten yards and plunged into the end zone to run the score to 16-0.

Now the Huskies refused to be stopped. Shortly before the per-iod ended UConn was back knocking on the goal line door. After UConn recovered a Mike Salem fumble on the Redmen 29, the Huskies drove to the three. Gerry White climaxed the drive by plunging over from there. Tom Kopp's pass found Tony Pignatello for two more points and the spread was 24-0.

Gerry White, who replaced Barbarito in the second half, personally led the final UConn march. The sophomore work horse constantly bulled his way through the center of the UM line and then climaxed a 94 yard drive by romping over from ten yards out. Klimas' toe again was true and the final tally read 31-0. EXTRA YARDS

When UMass defeated Harvard last Saturday, the win was considered to be a major upset. Another "major upset" happened to the Crimson this week as they were topped by Cornell, 12-0. THE PICTURE OF DESPAIR AT UMASS HOMECOMING

This picture typifies the feelings of UMass supporters during the last half of Saturday's Homecoming game against Connecticut. A record crowd of 10,500 was on hand to watch the Redmen go down to defeat at the hands of the Huskies. Part of the throng can be seen beginning to leave the packed Alumni Field, when it appeared that all hope of victory was lost.

Soccer Team Downed By Huskies, 4-0; Trinity Next

by DAVE WILLARD '64

Saturday morning the UMass soccer team fared little better than their big brother football team in the afternoon, as the booters went down to a 4-0 de-feat at the hands of UConn. The men from Connecticut ruined the Redmen's hopes for a successful Homecoming debut, scoring be-fore five minutes had elapsed in the first period.

Myron Krasij executed a pretty crosskick, while moving to his right he shot the ball into the far left corner of the net beyond the outstretched arms of the oless goalie.

UCONN CONTROLLED

throughout most of the first perthroughout most of the first per-iod, UConn started the second frame in virtually the same fash-ion. But with about five minutes gone UMass decided to do something about the situation.

It all started when Andy Psilackus, co-captain for UMass sent a shot towards the goal that missed by inches of catching the corner. This seemed to fire the Redmen up as they pressed the UConn goal for the rest of the

After the half UConn came out baded for bear. UMass goalie Bob Slagle had to make several good stops. Midway through the good stops. Midway through the quarter UMass had their best defense, with a clear shot on goal. He shot the ball too soon, however, and the goalie was able to make an easy stop of it.

STEEVES SCORES

UConn tallied in the final two minutes of the period. Roger Steeves, left inner, kicked the ball and appeared to have scored only to have it hit the crossbar and bound over. Seconds later, not to be denied, Steeves used not to be denied, Steeves used his head this time, and had much better success as he headed the ball in, on a corner kick assist from Bob Curran. This made the 2-0.

UConn scored twice in the final quarter. The last goal was a real rarity in soccer as one of their fullbacks got the goal. Tony Attanasio, a scrapping fullback, had come way up as the UConn's were pressing. He picked the ball up from 25-30 feet out and sent a beautiful shot whizzing towards the UMass goal. The ball arched up and over the goalie into the far right corner, an impossible shot to stop. This rounded out the scoring for the day as UConn went home with a 4-0 victory under their belts.

Although the men from Connecticut did score four goals, if it hadn't been for the superb work of goalie Bob Slagle the score would have been astronomical. Slagle made a total of 29 saves, several bordering on the sensa-tional side, while UConn goalie

Slagle's outstanding play was closely rivaled by that of co-captain Chuck Hulett, who served duty at both the fullback and halfback positions. Twice he saved goals when his goalie was out of position and played a fine defensive game. Theory Or Fact Of Evolution Discussed

by JOHN HOLDEN Collegian Staff Reporter

Rev. William A. Wallace, O.D., Associate Professor of Natural Philosophy, raised the question at the Newman Club meeting Tuesday evening, "Is evolution a theory or a fact?" He spoke first of the current scientific facts which support evolution and then criticized the current non-Catho lic views of many scientists.

Rev. Wallace said the evolution embraced three questions: the origin of the universe, the origin of life on earth, and the origin of man.

Besides these questions, there are theories often involving spec-ulations which may be foreign to Catholic belief. He mentioned three: the materialistic philoso-phy found in Julian Huxley's writings on evolution; the pan-theism of Hegel, and the positiv-istic philosophy which holds that evolution is a fact, not a theory.

These systems recognize that only matter is the existing "stuff" of the universe. Catholics are taught that "man is a being composed of body and soul." This belief holds that the universe is composed of matter and a spirit which created the material universe. The soul, or spirit, is an immaterial essence which is immortal and which is defined as the sum total of the processes in the brain; i.e. the intellect, the will, and the memory. Rev. Wallace throughout his speech stressed the points that the universe exhibits intelligence and great order in its structure, that science is based on permanent laws and cycles, and that the material world is not subjejct to sudden change. He said, "If the universe changed tomorrow, there would be no science."

Clarke School Will Present Fashion Show

A fashion show will be pre-sented by the parents and alumni of the Clarke School for the Deaf in Northampton on Friday, Octo-ber 14. A.S.I.S. Seeks U.S. Job Accommodations by JAMES R. REINHOLD '61, News Associate

The American Student Information Service of Frankfurt, Germany, which has arranged summer employment abroad for American college students during their summer vacations, is now inaugurating an exchange pro-gram to bring European stu-dents here.

The A. S. I. S. is currently seeking potential job opportunties and living, accommodations for European students during the 1961 vacation months. Persons knowing of job openings for non-permanent, non-skilled labor, or knowing of individuals wishing to accommodate the young people in their homes are asked to advise the ASIS.

The organization is currently planning its fourth year of operations in bringing American stu-dents abroad, The A. S. I. S. programs include job placement farm, hotel, construction, hospi tal, resort, child care, or camp counseling positions. U.S. stu-dents work overseas during a four to eight week period in addition to spending time traveling under the A. S. I. S. package plan, the "European Safari."

J. T. Clayton, Associate Pro-fessor of Agricultural Engineer-ing has been awarded a National Science Foundation grant for advanced study and research covering the period September 1960 to January 1961. He has taken a leave of absence for this activity to be carried on at Cornell University. This study will be in the area of farmstead engineerring. He hopes to complete his doctorate during this period.

Prof. Clayton came to UMass from the University of Illinois in 1957, and since that time has been in charge of the farmstead engineering phase of the Agri-cultural Engineering program. Prof. Clayton has written many articles, papers and bulletins, and enjoys national recognition as one of the outstanding young men in his field, says Dr. R. W.

Even though modern electronic computers work at almost unbelievable speeds, the scientist is way ahead of them.

Put quite simply, scientists have been thinking up complex problems faster than even the fastest computers could handle them. To close this gap, IBM created STRETCH, the world's fastest, most powerful computer.

The first STRETCH system will go to the AEC at Los Alamos to aid in nuclear reactor design. This goliath can do a million additions or subtractions a second. THE STATE OF THE UNIVERSITY:

By Faculty Turnover

tors commonly rise in the academic world only by constant moves and that the educator's best bargaining power is his mobility.

The University, he said, is in a difficult age of growth and is faced with an overwhelming lack of facilities. "The most acute need at present is that of an adequate library." Woehrlin suggested that many educators may have left UMass because they felt they couldn't teach on the level which they thought they should. This could have been because of the lack of proper library books in large enough quantity.

He explained that this library situation exists partially because of the antiquated faculty book purchase system. In the history department, for example, each instructor is given control of twenty dollars per course per semester. With this money, the instructor may purchase books for the library that refer to his course. In most cases, this allotment is too small to purchase the many needed reference books. Therefore the library has inadequate reference facilities in specific courses.

Advocates Improvement of Attitude

"American college campuses are not world renowned for their intellectual atmosphere," Woehrlin commented. The first thing that UMass students should strive for in this field is a general improvement of campus atmosphere, making honest intellectual pursuit honorable. Another means by which our atmosphere would be strengthened is by the development of stronger student-faculty-administration association.

Senate Holds Camera Bill: Makes $100 Appropriations

On A Fifth Freedom

During the course of several past issues of the Collegian, the editorial page has presented a discussion and open debate on the Chinese Revolution and the United States' position and involvement with China, Formosa and the Mainland. The discussion has continued into this issue, and so perhaps some of you are now wondering what will be the outcome. We ask, in the hopes of bringing this discussion and future discussions into focus: can there be a conclusion, an answer? Who is right? Is it the one who asserts himself the most; who brings to his support the most quotations, the most excerpts?

A generality might be explored. Throughout history we have been saturated with numerous analyses, criticisms, and interpretations. Almost anyone would agree that there are countless numbers of historians and writers producing prolifically; all of them, in effect, are imposing their own views on a vast array of data already in print. With all these interpretations, there will undoubtedly be many contradicting and negating many others. How will we finally come to the conclusion that this is so and that isn't?

Up until now we, all of us, have not been obliged to accept any one opinion—that is, unless we have been pressured into it unbeknownst to ourselves. According to the Constitution (although the First Amendment has not stated so in black and white) we are supposedly allowed the freedom to think. We are still maintaining this prerogative to think by using our own frames of references, whether they are limited or not.

Many political commentators have written and commented nationally on the present American situation. They have cried out that we as a nation are on the decline. Many have seen and given consideration to the steady rise in the effective pressure groups trying, and succeeding in many cases, to assert their will. What point of view can we draw from this? It seems that discussion, opinions exposed in the open forum of the college press and in the "free" press nationally are a vital part of the uncoerced spirit . . . preventing stagnation.

More discussion and more interest in discussion and debate must continue. We would like to encourage both student and faculty to continue by adding their own ideas and opinions to the pot. The result might be just goulash, but it can also be good goulash.

Apathetic Lately?

by Judy St. Jean
The opportunities for students to participate in and view amateur theatre in the Amherst area are numerous; yet many are unaware or disinterested in the creative opportunities which surround them. As students it is part of education to give of yourself in a significant way. We of the American society are conditioned to receive, not to give of ourselves. This isn't our fault entirely since we are conditioned with the drug-like effects of television which diffuse into the brain and lull it into inactivity. There is something, however, which can be done about it-take advantage of the cultural outlets which are offered you. The Operetta Guild has planned a campus service to help bring college theatre into the price range of all students. Wednesday October 19, at 8:15 in Bowker Aud. the Operetta Guild will present Thunder in the Hills, an original musical by UMass Alumni, in a special Student Night Production for the Students! All tickets are 75 cents, and the creativity and energy which this campus has to offer will be displayed for You. Don't ever let the words "Intellectual Apathy" cross your lips if you are not willing to partake of or just view the creative products of the undergraduate and graduate students of your campus!

Blood

The Campus Religious Council announces that the annual blood drive will be extended until this Monday at 5 P.M. due to the holiday Wednesday. All those over 21 have to do to give blood is to sign the form which is available at the Union lobby counter. Those under 21 will also need their parents' permission. Forms for this permission may be picked up at the lobby counter as well.

The Bloodmobile will be on campus November 2 and 3. Last year over 500 pints of blood were given. Ironically, the number of girls giving blood was three to one over the men.

By donating blood one is credited with the amount given so that if and when he needs blood he may obtain it at no charge from the Red Cross. Let's get out and fill the blood bank. Anyone from 18 to 59 is eligible.

Unchanging History—Chinese Revolution

by JAMES WEAVER '60 (Graduate School)

A quote from the book Democracy Versus Commun ism by Dr. Kenneth Colegrove:

"In 1927 the Kuomintang gained control of the "In 1927 the Kuomintang gained control of the Chinese government and set out on the hard task of trying to build a united democratic republic. But Chiang Kai-Shek and his followers had to spend most of their time and strength fighting two enemies: Communist guerrilla bands (established by Soviet Agent Michael Borodin) and the armles of the old war lords. This was the beginning of a long civil war. It was a three-cornered war—the Republic of war. It was a three-cornered war—the Republic of China under Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek fighting the Communists on one side, and on the other the war lords who stubbornly held on to many provinces.

"Japanese military leaders had long sought to China; now they thought they saw chance, In 1931 they invaded Manchuria. For the next fifteen years Chiang Kai-shek and his followers had to flight desperately to keep the invader from conquering all of China. Mao Tse-tung and his Communists held on to their base in North China. They gave half-hearted support to Chiang's fight against Japan. Actually, they were saving their strength to attack the Kuomintang later.

"At the end of World War II, the Communists, with support from Soviet Russia, renewed the Chinese Civil War. Stalin had promised President Roosevelt and the Republic of China that he would give Chiang Kai-shek any weapons which the Japanese armies surrendered, but he broke his promise Instead he handed over to Mae Teatunement. Instead, he handed over to Mao Tse-tung most ise. Instead, he handed over to Mao Tse-tung most of the huge armaments the Japanese surrendered in North China. This meant that the Chinese Communists in North China had better weapons than the war-weary armies of the Chinese Republic. After the war, leaders of other nations put pressure on Chiang Kai-shek to compromise with the Chinese Communists and take them into his government. Some observers who may have been friendly to the Chinese Reds even claimed that Mao and his party were not real Communists, but merely "agrarian were not real Communists, but merely "agrarian reformers."

"But Chiang knew better. He may have made mistakes, but years before he had learned one important fact—namely, that the Communists never enter a government except to destroy it. From 1945 to 1946 there was an uneasy truce between Chiang and the Chinese Reds. The Communists constantly grew stronger. They refused to take part in a National Assembly to write a row constitution. tional Assembly sto write a new constitution, so the Assembly went ahead without them, adopting a new constitution and electing Chiang President of the Republic of China.

"Meanwhile Communist depredations broke out again. When American aid stopped, the Chinese Republic proved unable to stop Mao's Soviet-supported armies. The Communists swept south. In 1949 the Chinese Republican government had to flee to the island of Formosa, which the Chinese call Taiwan

"China's 'Red Terror' followed the Russian patcurrent communist cadres (groups of trained agents) quickly spread through the provinces, encouraging peasants to seize the land. They organized rough courts or "people's tribunals" to try landowners, As a rule, the landlords were shot or beaten, or stoned to death. All schools came under Communist control and the courses were changed to give teachers and students intensive training in Communist thinking. Communist agents arrested and abused missionaries, priests, and nurses. From 1948 to 1956 the Com-munists killed, by reliable estimate, at least twenty million Chinese. By 1956 twenty-five million Chinese had been herded into slave labor camps."

Close quote, Mike. Incidentally, that book wasn't Close quote, Mike. Incidentally, that book wasn't the source of my 20 million figure. Taiwan under Chiang's government has recently announced economic self-sufficiency. The success of democratic processes here distresses the communists in the East as much as the success of the West Germany's Berlin does those in the West.

Healthy Criticism

To the Editor:

Just a quick note to voice our disapproval of the practice of printing articles, by students, that are calculated to be disrespectful to persons holding administrative or faculty positions.

A prime example of this was the article by one Mike Palter in which the word "sir" was used to the extreme for obvious reasons, in reference to a peron who through diligent effort has attained a posi-on commanding the respect of all but the ill-bred "dregs" of our society.

It's our opinion that future articles should be more of a constructive and less of a derogatory nature. It's our contention that criticism is healthy when used properly, but degradation is never healthy. Altering the common cliche, the Mike Palters ought to "shape up or be shipped out" of the Collegian.

There is no doubt about it. The Commons has declared war against the student body.

Coffee is bravely snatched out of the hands of those preferring their coffee hot at the end of the meal. The Commons scores a double gain whenever anyone loses his meal ticket. Those who have lost their tickets are courageously repulsed until official orders (heh, heh, the office is closed) have been obtained. A victorious above scheme double to the control of the tained. A victorious cheer goes up every time one of "the other side" returns part of his uneaten "balanced diet" or walks away hungry. It has been rumored diet or walks away hungry. O'Connor Lambasts Republicans' 'Status

On the foreign front, on the position of public morality, and on the domestic basis the status quo maintained by Republicans is causing the stature and prestige of the United States to decline.

This was the theme of a speech at the Student Union given by Thomas J. O'Connor, Mayor of Springfield and Democratic bald spots.

candidate for United States Senator from Massachusetts. Accusing the Republicans of be-ing satisfied that peace and prosperity is good enough, O'-Connor emphasized that "all is not well on the foreign front," citing the insult to President Eisenhower at the Paris confer-ence, the cancellation of his visit to Japan, the South American attack on Nixon, the situation in Cuba, and the recent near success of Red China's bid for recognition in the United Nations.

Quoting President Eisenhower's statement in 1952 that above all we must be guided by moral law and that government politics should be "as clean as a hound's and that government politics should be "as clean as a hound's tooth," O'Connor pointed out the corruption that was revealed in the Republican Administration. He detailed the operations of Sherman Adams and other "members of the hound's tooth society."

Finally, "all is not well on a omestic basis." Millions of people, and people in every large city of the nation live in "rotten, vermininfested buildings," and 34 million people receive a weekly income of less than $14. Further, we must admit to our senior citizens that we know they aren't getting proper medical care.

Thousands of people are being denied adequate education, and if we maintain the status quo Russia will soon surpass us in such fields as medicine, engineering, and science

In concluding, O'Connor said that Democratic policies will not necessarily mean more spending and might even mean less. Rather there should be a reallocation of funds in the national budget, for example from agriculture to missiles. Also there should be a reallocation of the gross national product, in which at present the expenditures for agriculture are three times as much as total expenditures for higher education.

Innocent Interest Initiates Inquiry

A chance subscription to a Soviet magazine by a junior business major has touched off a thorough investigation by the FBI into his background and standing as an American citizen.

The junior said that the magazine to which he subscribed, USSR, is considered by the FBI to be subversive.

The bizarre story began two years ago when, as a green frosh, he entered the library, where he picked up a copy of the New York Times. Unpatriotically, he read an article concerning the Soviet Exposition in Moscow, and then took a copy of USSP, from then took a copy of USSR from the magazine rack.

On the inside cover, he observed the following inscription: "The magazine, USSR, is published by reciprocal agreement lished by reciprocal agreement between the governments of the U.S. and the Soviet Union. The agreement provides for the publication and circulation of the magazine USSR in the U.S. and was an interesting and ostensibly innocuous magazine. Glancing through its pages, he came across an editorial concerning the Soviet Exposition. He compared the two articles and seemed amused by the factual and direct account given by the Times and the propagandistic view presented in the USSR.

Becoming more intrigued by the distinct differences of the articles, he decided to explore further the different ideologies of the two countries by use of this magazine, Therefore, he subscribed to USSR for six months.

Now a junior, our hero wishes to enter Advanced ROTC in the service of his country. His desire for patriotic duty, how-ever, was dimmed by the in-formation required on a standard form given all Advanced ROTC candidates.

When you broke a leg, they slapped a piece of tape on it and you went right back a leg, they stapped a piece of tape on traine you went right back in. Why, I remember the big game against State. Harry Siga-foos, our star quarterback, was killed in the third quarter. I mean, he was pronounced dead. But did that stop old Harry? Not on your tintype! Back in he went and kicked the winnin drop kick in the last four seconds of play, dead as he was. Back in my day, they played football, by George!"

Everything, say the old grads, was better back in their day—everything except one. Even the most unreconstructed of the old grads has to admit that back in his day they never had a smoke like Marlboro-never a cigarette with such a lot to like -never a filter so easy drawing, a flavor so mild yet hearty, so abundant, so bountiful—never a choice of flip-top box or soft pack.

So old grads, young grads, and undergrads, why don't you settle back and have a full-flavored smoke? Try Marlboro, the filtered cigarette with the unfiltered taste, and Homecoming will be a happy occasion and the sun will shine and the air will be filled with the murmur of wings and no man's hand will be raised against you.

At Homecoming time—or any time—try Marlboro's unfil-tered companion cigarette—mild, flavorful Philip Morris... Regular size or king size Commander—a brand new and happy experience in smoking! Havea Commander—welcome aboard!

Campus Fire Department Features Modern Techniques by ROGER CRUFF '64, Collegian Staff Reporter

The campus fire department, now an integral part of life at the university, serves not only as a diversion from the heat of aca-demic life for its members, but also as fine experience in modern firefighting techniques. Although few of the members will prob-ably make this field their future vocation, it enables some to con-tinue their activities which they started in high school and others a chance to become acquainted with the job that nearly every young boy coverts.

The department is relatively new on campus and dates from the early fifties when President Mather signed the charter. Paul Rosenberg '61, is the current Chief and is only the fourth to hold this position. Malcolm Sarna, '62, serves as Deputy, assists the Chief, and is next in line to assume command.

Legally, the smoke eaters of Legally, the smoke eaters of UMass are an auxiliary department of the Amherst Fire Department and also members of Civil Defense. As such, they attend fires in town, for which they may leave classes as well as may leave classes as well as those on campus and provide an important service to both areas. Although the University has no equipment of its own, the town possesses some of the finest available and is currently buying a new truck a new truck.

The department is limited to 16 members by the town of Am-herst and the current comple-ment of 15 men is the largest to date. Last year's members com-pleted basic and advanced training classes in fire fighting tech-niques for officers and men which was sponsored by the Common-wealth. They also fought blazes in Northampton and Greenfield as well as in Amherst.

The fire fighters are now attending Amherst Fire Department drills and receiving top co-operation from town officials.

The campus fire department is now in a period of increasing recognition by both town and campus. They perform many needed services entirely without

AEPi Edges TEP In Nose Bowl Clash

AEPi, before an estimated crowd of 500 people, defeated the boys from TEP 7-6 in the annual Bowl game, last Monday

The contest on the whole was a strictly defensive one, with hard blocking and fine passing. The first score of the game came with only two and one half min-utes left to play in the first half.

AEPi signal caller Mike Klein-erman, fired to his right end Mike Ellison who went over for the score. The point after was made on a pass from Hammel-burg to Ellison, and at the end of the half the blue_and gold led,

Although the second half was also a defensive period, the Tep-pers seemed to have the edge, since their passing attack started clicking under the able hands of Quarterback "Borco" Rason.

TEP's only tally came during the latter part of the second half. Al Levick intercepted a long pass

Freshman Gridders Edged By Surprised B.U., 13-12

The freshman football squad, led by Coach Dick MacPherson, lost a heartbreaker Wednesday to a Boston University team which was supposed to be their best in years, 13-12.

With twelve seconds to go in the game, B.U. got possession of the ball on the UMass 48. A pass brought them deep into UMass territory, and on the last play of the game, a second pass allowed them to score.

The little Redmen squad looked very good on the field, stated Coach MacPherson. Early in the game, halfback Fred Lewis, whose exceptional speed and ball han-dling has marked him for a coming Redmen star, took the pig-skin and scampered 48 yards for the score only to be called back on a clipping penalty.

This didn't stop him, however, for soon after he ran 56 yards for the Massmen's first TD.

A while later, John Fernandez ran a punt pack 68 yards for the second Redmen touchdown.

B.U.'s initial score came when they pulled off a great draw play to go fifty yards for the TD.

Coach Dick MacPherson was pleasantly surprised at his squad's showing and is confident that the team will do well against Springfield and New Hampshire. The game with UConn should be tougher, as the Huskies are boasting a good deal about their freshman squad.

The frosh will really be out to get the win next Saturday when they host Springfield, for Coach MacPherson graduated from that school, having played exceptional football there.

Set For Wednesday

A goal of 600 pints of blood has been set for the Campus Blood Drive, November 2 and 3. According to Kevin Lavin '61, president of the Campus Relig-ious Council and student director of the drive, about 350 pints have already been pledged.

Wednesday is the deadline for students under 21 to pledge blood. "We must set this dead-line because of the time involved in mailing letters to parents to get approval," said Lavin, Stuover 21 may donate without registering in advance.

Sign-up cards have been distributed to all dormitories and students are asked to bring the completed cards to the SU lobby

Hours for donating blood are Wednesday, November 2, from 10 a.m. to 3:45 p.m., and Thursday, November 3 from 9 a.m. to 2:45 p.m. Students are asked to allow one hour at the Blood Bank. The bank will be set up in the recreation room of Arnold

Coffee, Tea Or Milk

Dr. Thomas O. Wilkinson of the sociology and anthropology department chats with students during one of the morning coffee hours held last week in the Bristol room.

In the soberly, refreshing atmosphere of the Bristol-Essex-Hampshire rooms of the Student Union, students and faculty now have the opportunity to enjoy a cup of coffee and a bit of pastry with early morning chat. The Student Union Governing Board has arfor the past three weeks between 9 to 10:30 a.m.—in order to encourage a closer student-faculty relationship.

The response to this break with the mumble-jumble of the Hatch appears to be very good. Many of the mornings have been a little slack perhaps, but this might partly be due to hesitation by students who suspect that this is strictly for the elite of the campus, the faculty. Possibly, not all of the students are yet aware of this coffee

At any rate, why not just stop in some morning, if you haven't already, and see what's going on in the Bristol room? See who's there? Since the question of continuing this coffee hour is coming before the SUG Board in the very near future, now is certainly the best time for us to show interest in the continuation of this new program.

Watch Out For That Car!

Millions of dollars worth of educational facilities have been invested in the University of Massachusetts to add to the mental and social betterment of the students. It seems, therefore, slightly ludicrous that the safety of its students is presently being regarded with laxness.

We are speaking about the hazardous traffic-pedestrian situation in front of the Student Union during the hours of eight, twelve, and four o'clock. A student takes his life in his hands when he attempts to cross the street there at any one of those times.

A random survey on one weekday showed that approximately 187 cars pass the Union between 11:50 a.m. and 12:10 p.m. Of this number 101 belonged to the administration while only 35 belonged to the students. The only administrative car not to make an appearance was the police car. Obviously this onslaught of traffic creates a major hazard to the crowd of students flocking to the Union. classes, and lunch.

The administration passes off this situation regretfully by emphasizing the fact that the school budget will not allow any additional policemen; thus the commerce in this region goes on undirected. While we sympathize with the financial difficulty involved, we note that two new policemen have been added to the force. Could not at least one of these law enforcers be prevailed upon to come to the aid of the students in their battle against the vehicles of the administration? What areas of the campus are so dangerous as to require the attendance of the entire police force at these times? Is this problem so unimportant that it can afford to be overlooked? We think not.

If we were to concede that police aid is not plausable, another solution might be considered. Would it be possible to construct temporary barriers in the vicinity of the Union during these perilous hours? This would force the traffic, especially that from South College, to be rerouted through the rear exits, enabling the students to cross the street without eminent danger.

Dean Hopkins himself declared: "We are extremely fortunate that we haven't had any dangerous accidents. The situation is certainly appalling.

If, then, the situation is viewed with distress even by the hierarchy of the school, why is this policy of laissez-faire employed? Is the administration waiting for someone to be critically hurt before taking any action? We might remind them that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

We would like to add, however, that this situation is not being completely ignored. Besides the current Collegian investigation of the traffic problem in front of the Union, the Student Senate has asked one of the senators for a report on the situation. Dr. Gillespie, Administrative Assistant to the President, also has a graduate studying the matter. With all this due consideration it would be nice if some solution could be reached.

Fraternities Overrated

TO THE EDITOR:

In the left-lead article of the Sept. 16 issue of the "Collegian" ("Dean Hopkins Urges Presidents to Brag"), you quote Dean Robert S. Hopkins as asserting the necessity for fraternities to "get off of the defensive." In the three past years that I attended UMass., I was impressed with the fact that the fraternities were on the offensive. Yea, the most offensive students on campus were fraternity members.

But it is on another point that I choose to challenge Dean Hopkins. He suggested for fraterni-ties such activities "as entertaining orphans, decorating Am-herst's parking meters at Christ-mas and collecting for the heart fund in Amherst " This is a brutal insult to the persons who perform these admirable deeds. I would prefer to think these deeds were performed by persons sincerely trying to express good will, not persons desperately trying to promote good publicity.

As the matter stands, the fraternities get excellent coverage through student stringers and the University News Office, and much too much space in the "Collegian". The "Collegian" serves students, faculty, administration, and alumni—the fraternities are less than 40% of one of these groups, the students. I have seen of the "Collegian" which they have been granted 80% of the news pages (other than ads), yet Editor Rayner staunchly asserts that the frats vill get even more coverage Good grief!

The fraternities are over-publicized, their importance over-rated. If they feel pressed in a struggle for existence, perhaps an increased effort to support more worthwhile activities will induce the needed vigor. Surely the use of such programs as the Orphan Annie Drive as models increased positive action will do far more toward reaching the alleged goals of fraternities than a program of cramming boasting down the throats of indifferent

CHINA – PART 4 1949 TO FUTURE

by MIKE PALTER '63

Agriculture. Upon taking power, the Communists found themselves up against many problems. Agriculture and industry were stifled, and inflation was running rampant. The Chinese, learning from the Russian "experiment," now instituted various land reforms which favored the poorer peasants. Instead of harsh and rapid collectivization, the Chinese established model collective farms which were to lay the ground work for things to come. (As we know, however, the "communal" system has been pushed with fantastic vigor.)

Some explain the comparative ease of Chinese collectivization by the fact that the Communists had, indeed, controlled many areas of China previous to 1949, thus preparing the peasantry in these areas for collectivization. This is probably true. In addition to the concentration of effort (implied by the collective system) the Communists opened new areas to fertilization and greatly increased output in grain, cotton, and other agricultural products.

Industry. In China, as in the Soviet Union, women form a large

Industry. In China, as in the Soviet Union, women form a large part of the labor force. In 1954, 60% of the textile workers were women. (At the present, we have no reason to believe that this percentage has not gone up, judging from the efficiency of the nurseries.)

centage has not gone up, judging from the efficiency of the nurseries.)

In steel production, Red China has increased output from 1.3 million tons in 1952 to 8 million in 1958. By 1970, Mao Tse Tung envisions a steel output of 30 million tons. In all, China has expanded its industrial production of 1949 almost five times. With help from Russia, the Chinese have developed new machines and better techniques. This help together with the growing industrial labor force will no doubt assure the Chinese of higher industrial output in the years ahead.

Education. The Chinese accompanied their gains in agriculture Education. The Chinese accompanied their gains in agriculture and industry with an even more significant drive in education. Obviously, the Communists realized that they could not base a successful society on a population which, in 1949, was barely 10% literate. In China today there are over 200 colleges with an estimated 500,000 science students. Indeed, with every year since 1949, the number of Chinese who benefit from public education has increased two, three, and four-fold. The Chinese are operating at this moment at least four atomic reactors. This fact, indeed, is a harbinger of things to come.

Health. With many millions of people, many of which live in extremely close quarters, it is obvious that disease, if unchecked, will run rampant. The Chinese have instituted sweeping reforms in the fields of public health and sanitation. Vaccination is now commonplace, and small pox as well as plague have been all but wiped out.

So China grows and prospers under the impetus of stern governmental control. It is not for me to philosophize here upon the effects of Marx-Leninism since, as you see, this analysis is of an economic nature.

It is rather for us, as Americans, to realize that there are roughly 650 million Chinese living and working under a system which is diametrically opposed to capitalism. History has indeed shown that two hostile and opposing forces cannot long exist side by side. For your sake and mine, I hope that history is wrong!

Redmen Come From Behind To Foil Rams, 34-16

Lussier, Benvenuti, Fernandez Pace UM Last Quarter Surge

The game's initial score came in the first quarter when Roger Benvenuti climaxed a 52 yard march by cracking over from the one. John Bamberry toed the extra point and the Redmen were riding high, 7-0.

RAMS BOUNCE BACK

The Rams bounced back early The Rams bounced back early in the final half when Bob Humphrey took John McCormick's punt on his own 37, broke loose from a tribe of Redskins, and galloped 65 yards to paydirt. Quarterback Bill Baxter skirted the end on a keeper play for the two points to give the Rams a momentary 8-7 lead.

DELNICKAS APPEARS

The second UMass TD featured the running of Lussier and the return to action of co-captain Tom Delnickas. Lussier did most of the carrying on this drive as he constantly cracked the right side of the Rhodey line. Mike Salem capped the drive by plunging over from a yard out. An attempted 2 point conversion failed and UMass had a 13-8 advantage.

The lead changed hands again early in the final quarter when Rhode Island recovered Ken Kezer's fumble on the UM 47. The Rams drove for a first down on the 2 and three plays later John Rollins bucked over. The conversion attempt was successful when Baxter spotted Rollins and connected to give the Rams a 16-13

DEFEAT TO VICTORY

The score remained unchanged atil the Redmen snatched victory from defeat on the McCor-mick to Lussier scoring play. Bamberry's toe was true again and the Redmen sported a 20-16 lead.

Mass. Scores On Own Kickoff

The next play was one of the most unusual this observer has ever seen. Massachusetts scored on its own kickoff, Rollins picked up Conway's kickoff and was soon hit hard. The ball popped loose and alert guard Ben Fer-nandez grabbed it in mid air and scampered all the way unmolested. Bamberry converted again to push the count to 27-16.

The Redmen climaxed their spree when Ed Bumpus recovered a Baxter fumble deep in Ram land. Benvenuti toted the ball to the two and then scored on the next play, Bamberry again split the uprights and the scorethe uprights and the score-board's final figures sparkled, visitors 34-Rhode Island 16.

Last Friday afternoon the socwent down to another defeat, this time at the hands of a strong Trinity eleven, 10-4.

The first half was a compara-The first half was a compara-tively close tussle with the men from Connecticut holding only a 3-0 bulge at the half time whistle. The second half was an altogether different story as the heavens opened up and rained goals on the UMass net. Trinity could do nothing wrong as they scored from all angles and positions.

The Redmen themselves didn't do badly as they scored more goals in this game than in any previous contest. Most of them scored while the Trinity first eleven were in there, also.

It was simply a case of the predominantly young UMass team being outmanned. They gave a good account of thempredominantly gave a good account of them-selves, however, as Coach Larry Briggs was very pleased with his team's performance against so strong a team.

The whole team played a good game, but particularly outstand-ing were Andy Psilackus who scored two goals, Dave Amund-son who played his best game of the season according to Coach Briggs, and Bob Weeks at left wing.

Off this showing Friday which showed marked improvement, the Redmen are all set to break into the win column Tuesday against W.P.I.

Fine Team Effort Wins For Harriers Over BU, UConn

by DICK QUINN '63

Friday afternoon a fine team effort by the Footrickmen on their home course enabled Mass. to edge out Connecticut and Bosto edge out Connecticut and Boston University, 35-39-65, despite a record-breaking performance by Bill Muller of BU. In winning the race in 24 minutes, 35 and one fifth seconds, the BU flash broke the then-existing record of Mass. 4.8 mile course by New Hampshire's Doug MacGregor as a sophomore in 1958 a sophomore in 1958.

The three incumbents represent the conservative camp. They are President pro tem Dennis J. Twohig, Vice-president pro tem Gail Osbaldeston, and Treasurer pro tem Linda Achenbach. The secretary's post was left open when Sue Onksen didn't run for reelection.

The difference between a liberal and a conservative in the Senate is primarily that the con-servative puts a greater emphasis upon keeping the tax rate down, while the liberal puts a greater emphasis upon the needed services. The conservative element will ask how much an added serv-ice is going to cost before looking at the question of how much the service is needed. The liberal usually will ask the two ques-tions in reverse order.

Election of officers of the Student Senate tonight promises to be not only a contest of the Student Senate tonight promises to be not only a contest of the state rise sharply or remain the same. Although the tax has been cut for two consecutive years, it was possible mostly through the rapid increase of the student popula-tion. An estimated cutback of 350 students would mean either a reduction of the services, probably in the large organizations such as the Index, Concert Assn., and Collegian, or a tax increase.

The liberal block, should it gain office, will probably bring the tax rate back to where it was two years ago, before conservative elements cut the tax two consecutive years. These conservatives when the same tax is the same tax is the same tax in the same tax is the vatives expanded services by about 10 percent, while the uni-versity population expanded at a greater rate, thus permitting the reduction

Pres. Twohig, who seemed to be unbeatable two weeks ago, is expected to be challenged by Robert Trudeau. It may turn out to bert Trudeau, It may turn out to be a real contest, since Twohig has been criticized severely for his conservative policies. Tru-deau, also a senior, is relatively quiet on the Senate floor but has quiet on the Senate floor but has a liberal voting record. He came into the public spotlight when he came in first place in a bitter contest for the three seats from Van Meter Dormitory. He not only received the highest num-ber of votes, but downed the op-nesition by pearly 100 votes. position by nearly 100 votes

Twohig was vice-president un-der Robert Zelis and was elected president pro tem when Zelis red last spring. Representing married students dormitories, tired last the married students dormitories, Twohig's chances will probably depend upon the number of toes he has stepped on in the Senate. Accused of being Twohig's "yes man" by some, Gail Osbaldeston will have a fight on her hands against the more liberal Arthur J. "Tex" Tacelli. While Miss Osbaldeston has a tremendous advantage in experience gained as treasurer, since the only stated function of vice-president is the administration of the dis-tinguished visitors program; Tacelli also swamped the opposition in the race for the three ternity seats.

Also running for vice-president Also running for vice-president is James O'Leary. According to one prominent senator, his chances are nil "because of his record."

Miss Osbaldeston, although the safest bet in the three contests, is likely to be criticized because she has a number of other ex-tracurricular activities and has a conservative voting record.

The biggest fight of the night will come when Donald A. Cro-teau challenges Linda Achenbach for treasurer. In Senate circles Croteau is an extreme libera and Miss Achenbach is an exliberal and Miss treme conservative.

Tax supported organizations are particularly interested in this contest because the treasurer has the closest control over the purse-strings of the organiza-

Job Opportunities Offered In N.Y. State Government

Opportunity for careers in New York State government is open to college juniors, seniors, and graduate students through the Professional Career Tests, which will be given on Decem-

These tests open the way to a great variety of jobs for college graduates. Successful candidates, graduates. Successful candidates, if appointed, may start work immediately after graduation. A bachelor's degree, regardless of the major, provides the requirements for some positions. Others require specialized training or practical experience.

Most appointments will be subject to a year as a trainee at a salary of $4,600 after which the salary rises to $4,988 with five yearly increases to $6,078. Some appointments will be made directly to the $4,988 level if the candidate has 30 credit hours of candidate has 30 credit hours of specialized graduate work or a year's experience. A new feature allows the direct appointment of some candidates with outstanding aptitude or scholastic achievements to the $4,988 level.

The State Department of Civil Service reports that opportunities for advancement are excellent. are reached by promotion from within the ranks. Directors and other top administrators earn salaries up to $18,722.

A new feature of the State's Professional Career Tests pro-gram is the establishment of a list of graduates who do not meet the educational or other require-ments for some positions. This list is expected to be especially useful as a source of qualified candidates for local jobs such as Case Worker, where specialized college training is not required.

Appointments are made conappointments are made con-tinually throughout the year and especially at graduation when many students become available for work. Citizenship is a requirement for appointment but candidates need not be residents of New York State.

The Department of Civil Service urges graduates and students nearing graduation who are thinking seriously about entering State service to apply at once. Applications and full information may be obtained at the University Placement Offices.

Senate Elections: Outcome Vital To Entire Student Body

Tonight's election of officers in the Student Senate is very important to every student and organization because it will vitally affect the question of how much the services will be expanded or cut back next year.

While every candidate in the running is competent enough to do the job well, we feel that a liberal attitude is desperately needed to make up for the past year of conserva-

While the overall budget for the years 1958-59 and 1959-60 increased by 19.3 percent and 18.7 percent respectively, this year's budget increased only 4.3 percent. The undergraduate population rose 8.3 percent this vear.

Characterized by an attitude of "Let's wait until next year," the Student Senate completely failed to take full advantage of the rapid expansion of the university population, cutting taxes instead of expanding services. There just isn't going to be a next year for organizations who are waiting for funds for capital expenditures because there is going to be a cutback of 350 students in

Just to maintain present services, the tax rate must be increased to where it should have been kept in the first place.

While the organizations wait for needed expansion and improvement, it is the students not the organizations, who are being cheated.

Another conservative philosophy which is to be condemned is their interpretation of the role of the Student Senate.

While the conservatives now in office maintain that the role of administering the tax funds is not the chief role, they have refused to officially discuss and work out solutions to campus problems. It was the Senate which was asked first to act in the Maroon Key controversy last spring, and they refused. Under such policies, the Senate, and therefore the students, lose their power to other bodies such as the RSO Committee.

Realizing full well that the Collegian may incur the wrath of the conservative element in the senate and might easily suffer a budget cut next Spring, we strongly urge now, and will continue to urge, the student representatives to vote for the liberal candidates because their ideas are what is needed by the student body.

Neo-Religious Tolerance

To the Editor:

The tendencies of the Federal administration to decry atheism, agnosticism and religious skepticism, to equate these with Gommunism, and to endorse Deism or Christianity is truly a deplorable insult to those who, within the free democratic framework, are led by their consciences to the position of religious restricts. gious uncertainty.

That the Communist system is atheistic is no ore reason for disparaging atheism than the fact that Franco's Spain is Catholic is a reason for Positions of agnosticism or atheism have been held by such great Americans as Mark Twain, Walt Whitman, Clarence Darrow and Ralph Waldo Emer-son, and by such great world thinkers as Bertrand Russell, Samuel Butler and Percy Bysshe Shelley. To depreciate the tradition of such great minds is to depreciate much of the liberal and humanitarian thought which is characteristic of the American

The fact that the Communists have attacked religion is not because the Communist state is atheistic, but because in setting the state up as a religion it cannot tolerate any dissenting religion, just as it cannot tolerate political criticism.

Let us not use Communist methods in retaliation. Let us not establish a hegemony of Deism which would be as pernicious as the Communist hegemony of atheism. Let us instead allow our nation to be as rich in free and independent thinking as the Soviet system is ctarily rich in free and system is sterile.

Neutral View on Quemoy and Matsu

As Quemoy and Matsu have become the centers of recent wide-spread attention, it may interest the students to know that they need only turn to the Government 25 textbook, Government by the People, by Burns & Pelatson, for an unbiased, untouched by the campaign, version of the question.

While it does state that abandoning them may encourage the Reds to try more territorial slezures, it also points out that the President agreed with the Secretary of State that "American forces should intervene only in the event the attack on the islands was clearly a prelude to the attack on Formosa." (These sound almost like the exact words of Kennedy.) A Preview

Thunder in the Hills is a philosophical musical play involving conflicts of real people who are faced with the universal problem of how to live in a world which forces men to make the decisions which will mold their lives.

Joe Kane, played by Don Brown, a senior majoring in accounting, is the antagonist, hiding his vulnerability behind a harsh and sullen front. This is Don's first appearance with the Guild although he has had previous musical experience.

Jeb Gentry, played by Tom Dodge, becomes the victim of Joe's hate. He is an idealist, searching for something, but he does not know what this 'something' is. Tom is also a newcomer to the Guild.

Margit, played by Buffy St. Marie, a junior philosophy major, is s daughter. She becomes the point at which the personalities of and Joe converge. She draws her idealism from Jeb but her strength of character from Joe.

The romantic leads in the play are Melissa Henner and Tom Gentry, Jeb's brother. Theirs is the 'perfect love.' A love which is inevitable, and which simply happens without any struggle or conflict. This simplicity contrasts sharply with the complexities of Joe, Jeb, and Margit. Melissa is played by Arlain Anderson, a sophomore and a member of the Chorale. Tom Gentry is played by Al Couper, a senior accounting major who appeared last year in the chorus of Bells Are Ringing.

Maw and Fess are a comic couple in the play, played by Karen Canfield, known for her performance in Auntie Mame, and Steve Allen, a well known figure on campus for his work in the Statesmen, CA, and Chorale. He is also Business Manager of the Guild. They are the leaders of the community, and the chief cause of the increase in

Frankly Speaking

Search For Identity

- by Genevieve Reall, '63

In the collegiate circle privacy is unpopular and gravity is disdained. These two facts are responsible, in part, for the diler self-understanding with which every student must cope.

To the student who strives for that urbanity and self-assurance which would characterize him as "with it", such a statement is meaningless because he thinks he finds himself in others. This is untrue. Ingless because he thinks he finds himself in others. This is untrue. It is a sad fact that on the campus—where the development of individuality should be most stressed—one finds a painfully earnest cultivation of others' standards. This is manifested in speech, dress, of course, and sloppy values. Solitude is abhorrent; sincere self-examination is largely unthinkable; evaluation of the collegiate mores is reserved only for the "eggheads."

It seems as though the person's duty to understand himself is his last duty. His first duty appears to be: "How can I understand others so that I will prove acceptable?" Hence, we see the phenomena of Hatch-roosting, calculated hilarity, overworked butts at the housemother, overworked butts at the Dean, an unwarranted esteem for alcohol, a disinclination to approach living too seriously, and above all a pathetically studied effort to appear as though one knows what "it" (college, life in general, social values) is all about. First and foremost it seems altogether necessary that one appears as though one were a connoisseur in the ways of the world. In short, social finesse becomes primary and one's values are oriented to how this effect may best be achieved.

feet may best be achieved.

This is hardly a preparation for the tasks and standards of adulthood. To find ourselves as potential adults at least, it is necessary to isolate ourselves from our neighbors—physically and psychologically—and consider ourselves in a private, as opposed to a public, context. Try thinking of yourself in terms of yourself. Who, then, are you? Are you what you way? Are you where you go? Are you what you wear? Are you where you go? Are you what you do? No. You are the agent of these activities. It is an exceedingly tenuous concept—this thing called self, the private agent. And yet, unless you are to become vapid and amorphous it is your responsibility to make your own acquaintance.

You cannot accomplish this through an anyious cultivation of any

Amorphous it is your responsibility to make your own acquaintance. You cannot accomplish this through an anxious cultivation of appearances. You can do it somewhat through the interplay of attitudes and ideas with others. But, basically, it is coming to terms with yourself that makes a beginning. Try, in the solitude of night, asking yourself the fundamental questions: not what will I wear Saturday or will I pass the quiz? Try formulating your own picture of the world, or ask yourself why your very existence should be of any consequence. You will probably hear some startlingly hollow—and frightening—echoes. And it IS frightening not to be able to put your finger on yourself or on your ideologies. But it initiates maturity.

Self-understanding is a high undertaking, for without it an ethical code of living is uncertain. Your creeds and your conduct are shaped by it; and whether or not they are legitimate creeds and worthy, conduct determines the destiny of our civilization.

Wednesday's Senate elections. Except for the offices of secreall incumbents were elected. Dennis Twohig retained the presidency by a 27-12 vote over Bob Trudeau. Using Wednesday's Collegian editorial and headline story, Twohig rebutted the accusation that he has several "yes-men" in key Senate positions. Flanders Airs Views On 'Great Debates'

by DIANE TOVET '64 Collegian Staff Reporter

The fourth in v series of politi-al "bull sessions" held Wednesday by Senator Flanders featured the Presidential TV Debates.

Some of the main questions raised about the debates have been: how are the debates getbeen: how are the debates get-ting on, who is getting the upper hand, and are the prospects of the candidates strongly enhanced by their appearances? Senator Flanders' impressions were that Kennedy had the advantage in the first debate, because of Nixon's poor make-up, poor light-ing, and obvious discomfiture. However, in the second debate However, in the second debate, Nixon was "better painted, better lit, and had better control over himself". In fact, it seemed that he had a slight edge over Ken-nedy, because the latter was, at times, flustered, while Nixon remained calm. The Senator also felt that American voters have an excellent opportunity to esti-mate the ability of two men from these debates. They afford many people a chance to see the men in action.

Quemoy-Matsu Question

Discussed

The debates have also proved to be an "attention getter" for the campaign. One of the issues raised concerned the policy in regard to the islands of Quemoy and Matsu. During the second debate, it appeared that Kennedy was in favor of giving up these was in favor of giving up these islands, while Nixon wanted to defend them as a matter of prindetend them as a matter of prin-ciple. However, in the third de-bate Kennedy said that no presi-dent should state his policy in advance. He hedged a little before admitting that he would be willing to fight if an attack on the islands preluded an attack on Formosa. Nixon's policy also suf-fered a change when he said that he agreed that the islands were important not for themselves, but in relation to Formosa Cuba Triggers Debate The second international issue which caused a great deal of dis-cussion in the debates was that concerning Cuba. Although Ken-nedy believes we were remiss in allowing Cuba to become so aggressive, he doesn't go as far as Truman in saying that we should defend it against Russia. Flanders wonders what Kennedy thinks we should have done. Are we bound to interfere in the internal affairs of Cuba? Flanders feels that the question of what to do next, rests on what happens

Nixon proposes several con-ferences of wise men after the election and before the assumpelection and before the assump-tion of office to consider the in-ternational problem. However, according to Flanders, "the judg-ment of the post President in ment of the next President is more important than an assembly of new committees". Kennedy's prescription for the solution of international difficulties is a strong defense, backed by a strong domestic economy.

Although this sounds like a good policy, the increase in de-fense is spoken of in terms of large expenditures. Flanders feels that rather than increasing the defense budget, we should have a wise allocation of the billions which are now being spent. He also thinks we should maintain our atomic stalemate, but we should have smaller military installations to cover the small skirmishes. The military should only be used to gain time for economic and political move-ments, not to buy peace. How-ever, the debates don't indicate in what way Nixon and Kennedy propose to use the time given strong military force. fact that economic and political action, not military action, is important should be pinpointed.

Both candidates look forward to greater economic strength.
According to Flanders, the trou-ble with the economic situation is the failure to divide equally

Mass. Review For YOU

Cultural activities were undeniably advanced last year when the Massachusetts Review-a burst of creative inspiration on the part of a small group of UMass faculty and administrators-was published for the first time. Once this idea for a literary review had been formulated, the enterprising group organized and pushed forward with determination and courage until the means for such a publication became an accomplished fact. Backed through the generosity of subscribers, patrons, and alumni, the Review editorial board produced four numbers containing critical articles and essays, short stories, poetry, and artwork.

The critic-reviewers of the Massachusetts Review have compared it with the reviews of Yale, Kenyon, and some of the other notables found on scholarly bookracks. It is no wonder. Listed on the content page of the first, historic issue of the Review was an Amherst favorite, Robert Frost, whose poem, "Somewhat Dietary", was published here for the first time and in the handwriting of Frost. A poem by E. E. Cummings and the drawings of Leonard Baskin, noted contemporary artist and sculptor at Smith Colwere also included along with the works of many others.

faculties of Harvard, Dartmouth, Yale and Brown are now taking such an interest in the spirit and development of the Massachusetts Review that they are contributing manuscripts. Number 4, the Summer 1960 issue, for instance, contained as a lead article Harry Levin's "What was Modernism?" A professor of comparative A professor of comparative literature at Harvard, he gave this as an address to the Humanities Association of Canada

However, highlighting the whole idea of the Review is the opportunity now open to the faculty and other members of our campus community for contributing and having published their own works.

Although the Review is purely a University creation, it has become a cooperative project of the four college area in both editing and manuscript contribution. All the members of the editorial board are contributing their efforts, and genius, with no promises of remuneration, except that of gratification in seeing a job well-done.

The Massachusetts Review has completed a year of publication; it has shown itself to be of immense value to the campus. Preparations are currently under way for Volume II. No. 1. We are certainly looking forward to this issue but to insure that this year's publishing, and the future's, will not be ham-pered too much with non-literary problems we are hoping that the student body, the faculty and administrators, and the alumni will all get behind the Review. Certainly $1.25 per copy or $5.00 for a subscription is not too much to part with when you think of it in terms of an investment for the University and for yourself.

PART V - THE BOMBAND DISARMAMENT

by MIKE PALTER '63

It is indeed difficult for one to write of our new found power without displaying some emotion. Those of us who gaze in horror at the victims of Hiroshima and Nagasaki offer no excuse for such emotion. Those of us who know the genetic consequences of radiation offer no excuse for this emotion. And this s all to the good. It is good because we realize the ull significance of a force which, if used improperly, could mean the extinction of Mankind, It is good cause it is a bond between men of reason and od-will. Indeed, one need not be excessively moral or idealistic to gasp at the very suggestion of nu-clear testing, to pale when our leaders speak of "clean bombs." Indeed, is the epitaph of our civiliza-tion to be: "They died a clean death"?

Yet, in this discussion it is necessary to look back to 1945 for the purpose of "orientation", if you will. Let us make an objective study of just how far

In the Hiroshima bomb, uranium-235, a "hard, avy white metal," was used. From a layman's int of view, suffice it to say, the amount of energy liberated by the fission of one uranium nucleus is about ten million times as great as the amount liberated in the decomposition of one molecule of Since on a molecular basis TNT and the atom of uranium weigh about the same, uranium-235 is about ten million times as powerful as TNT!

The phrase which the laymen is most acquainted with is "chain reaction". To produce this chain reaction we must have a large piece of uranium-235. "Critical mass" is merely the size of the piece of uranium metal that conduces to spontaneous explosion. Without utilizing the scientific terms for this chain reaction (e.g., the effect of neutrons on the uranium nuclei) let us merely use the time honored concept of the ping-pong balls poised on mousetraps within a container. It is easy to see that if one ball is "snapped from the trap", as it were, it will probably be snapped or "liberated".

As you might imagine, "liberation" of these balls will be accomplished in an extremely short length of time! Indeed within a millionth of a second an atomic bomb would have exploded.

The Nagasaki bomb utilized plutonium-239 which is more easily obtained than uranium-235. Plutonium-239 also is regarded as a superior nuclear explosive. Essentially, the mechanics of the chain reactions of both uranium-235 and plutonium-239 are the same. As for hydrogen bombs, let us just say that an atomic bomb is utilized as the detonator. If we consider this fact, it is not difficult to realize that a hydrogen bomb has an explosive energy one thousand times that of the Hiroshima or Nagasaki bomb!

In our discussion it is important to ascertain the relative power of the bombs. In doing this we should first consider the explosive power of a one-ton blockbuster (used extensively in World War II). "A oneton blockbuster, a bomb containing two thousand ounds of TNT, can demolish a large building and may kill 100 people or more. A megaton equals the explosive energy of one million tons of TNT. The United States as well as the Soviet Union and Great Britain have access to hydrogen bombs which contain an explosive power equivalent to 15 megatons, or, 15 million tons of TNT. Do you wonder why Einstein was worried?

As you have noticed, my discussion of this new weapon has been, in the main, confined to the explosive power of such. This, however, is not of the greatest concern at the present time. By this I mean that our principal consideration at the moment is with the testing of nuclear bombs and the inevitable consequences to the people of the world.

(This discussion will be continued on Monday.)

If I might refer to the Commuter crisis for a moment before going into today's message . . . The Registrar's office was a bit disturbed about that particular column in so far as I neglected, in my proposition of placing Commuters on a Molokain type island, to ine a solution as to how they would attend their classes. Here is my solution: the professors would lecture to them from shores of the pond. This would work out fine until it came time for the government professors to lecture. The ensuing scene could prove to be very embarrassing because, as most of us know, nobody attends government lectures on this campus. Therefore, people strolling by would see this figure, standing on several dozen New York Times, addressing the thin air. Also, to facilitate the Times problem, the department could have Joe Rogers swim out to the island several times a day with the students' copies.

This attendance bit is nothing new to the department. I can remember walking down the hall in Machmer last year and, looking in one room. I found a government rest lecturing a factor.

member walking down the hall in Machiner last year and, looking in on one room, I found a government prof lecturing, referring to notes, checking his watch, and drawing diagrams on the board. As I intruded further I saw that there wasn't a single soul in the class but the prof, yet he continued to lecture. After continuing for another 30 minutes, this teacher did something which more or less shook me for a minutes, this teacher did something which more or less shook me for a moment . . he passed out paper for a quiz on the New York Times. This dedication to duty seems to be the response to an infused drive of responsibility within all personnel of the government department which forces them to lecture incessantly regardless of attendance. In actuality, though, this infused drive I spoke of is an unmarked pill; a box of which can be purchased in a plain wrapper at your local drugstore. You must have seen the prof get shaky in class one day, fake a coughing spell, and step outside for a drink of water . . . and a pill. Then, disguised as a mild mannered political scientist for a daily, metropolitan agricultural college, he returned ready to take one metropolitan agricultural college, he returned ready to take the Third Reich, Congress and Henry Luce.

I mentioned the professor who was checking his watch while he lectured. This provokes me to ask if you have ever noticed during the spring of the year that the members of the government department arrive at their classes always one hour ahead of time. Now keep this fact in mind while I refer you to some background material. Those of you who have taken Govt. 25 must have seen and heard during your infrequent visits to class (such journeys are usually made under the mistaken impression that the course's hour exam is to be that day) that the lecturers believe the majority is not always right; in fact, seldom if ever is it right (while they point to our current Presidential administration as proof). A conclusion can therefore be gathered from all this: the reason the professors arrive at classes an hour earlier than we do in the spring is because there's a government department policy which refuses to recognize the rationality and constitutionality I mentioned the professor who was checking his watch while he refuses to recognize the rationality and constitutionality licy which refuses to recognize the rationality and constitutionality Eastern Daylight Saving Time because it was a product of the majority.

This fetish they have with the majority being wrong and intolerance of the average man's right to vote, is frequently exemplified in the class room when, after hearing the professor elaborate on the stupidity of the average voter, a student will stand up and head for the door, angrily shouting, "I don't know about you guys, but I'm going down to my ward and un-register!" At which time the prof will take out a small brown notebook, chalk up another stroke and mumble something to the effect of: "Well, a couple more and I may win the pool this week." pool this week."

Occasionally, after a lecture spiced with unkind words for Con-ss, Dwight Eisenhower, J. Edgar Hoover's morality, and Brookline's isolationism, some students have the courage to question the lecturer's patriotism. "Don't get me wrong, fellas. I only do this for a living. Actually, I'm all for this country of ours," he says as he puts on the Indian Madras jacket and hops on his "made in Japan" bicycle and heads for the parking lot where his German Porche is parked.

Roses For The Students

To the Editor:

A few days ago parents and their daughter stopped in to talk with us. They had been visiting colleges in the area the day before and having a few extra hours came to our campus though the daughter had no intention of applying here.

Apparently they stopped before the Student Union and asked directions from a co-ed. She was very kind to them. She showed them around campus, took them to a dormitory and introduced them to the Housemother.

The next day they came to the Registrar's Office. They were so impressed with the courtesy and friendliness of this co-ed and with the beauty and facilities of the campus that the daughter decided over night to expell here. over night to apply here.

Time and again parents and applicants who come to our office comment on this friendliness and courtesy of our students who put themselves out of their way to assist visitors and speak enthusiastically about the University. We are convinced that these students are carrying on one of our best public relations jobs. They are the best advertisement for the University.

In this day and age when it seems that our tendency to criticize is greater than that to appreciate, it is heart warming to have these fine reports about our students coming to us from our visitors. So we say "Roses To You."

From this point Brazier emphasized two duties which are part of the Catholic life; the spiritual duty, or the responsibility to work out one's own salvation, and the second duty, equally as important, to honor the system of law and order, or the civil authority. Quoting again he emphasized that Catholics "owe alligence not to individuals and not to offices but to the fabric of society".

Best Season In Fourteen Years Redman Goal As UMass Hosts Northeastern Huskies, Tomorrow

Massachusetts gridders hope to become the winningest Redmen team in 14 years when they tangle with Northeastern tomorrow in a 1:30 p.m. contest on Alumni Field. The Redmen now boast a 4-1 record and a win will enable them to equal the five victories of Walter Harges-heimer's 1946 squad.

The Huskies' teeth have been dulled thus far by three losses, but they're still plenty sharp. The men from Boston have a big, rough forward wall which averages over 200 lbs. Their heekfield is highlighted by invited averages over 200 lbs. Their backfield is highlighted by junior quarterback Ed Dutczak, who has only recently taken over the signal calling chores. Latin America Picked Topic For Weekend

The program committee for International Weekend ternational weekend announces that the title "Latin America in Ferment" has been tentatively chosen for the weekend. Discussions taking place during weekend will be concerned problems peculiar to Latin America and with the relations of the U.S. to that area. Letters of invitation have been sent to several prospective speakers and panelists.

Plans for the weekend are now being organized and work is in progress. Interested persons, however, are still welcome to join the committee. New members will be especially appreciated in the publicity department. See the Club Directory for meeting times.

Jean Paul Mather, former president of the University, spoke here Wednesday at the dedica-tion of the UMass language laboratory facilities in Bartlett

The dedication of the laboratory here climaxed five years of research and development by the language department personnel. The plans for the facilities were first formulated during Mather ninistration.

Present for the ceremonies were Mather; president John W. Lederle; Provost Shannon Mc-Cune; Prof. James M. Ferrigno, director of the laboratories; and representatives of all language departments here as well as from the engineering firms that planned the lab. Prof. Stowell C. Goding, head of the Romance language departments, served as host.

The speakers at the dedication all stressed the importance of the teachers over the purely mechanical paraphernalia. They recognized, however, that the UMass ab is a major contribution to educational progress here.

After the brief speeches, the public was provided demonstrations of the facilities, illustrating the equipment will be in tegrated into the educational pro-

Stan Kenton demonstrates his amiable modesty by immediately accepting a first name informality, and offers compelling sincerity and co-operation in the interviews. One of the most controversial figures in jazz, Stan is regarded as the originator of the Progressive school, but when asked about this contribution, he modestly replies that there were modestly replies that there were others working in that area. At the end of the interview, hearing the driving sounds of Count Basie's music reaching its brassy, penetrating peak, Stan sum marizes his feelings about jaz quite poetically "That's just the sound of our existence."

Miss Ann Richards, Stan's lovely vocalist-wife, proves she is a fine artist and performer in her own right. Her versatility is demonstrated by her warmth in the ballads and her ability to project Stan's famous driving brass section. As shown in her photo a very beautiful Ann Richards enraptures the interviewers.

Mary Holliday, who played for our interviewers a very beauti-ful improvisation on Stella by tul improvisation on Stella by Starlight, had played many names in jazz in the Woody Her-man Band before joining the Kenton band. He makes this healthy observation that all of the "Jazz Giants" are unique in their own way and make their own contributions. Marv also condemns comparisons which im-ply that one (band, soloist) is better than another. Each is an individual.

Thunder The Hills

The Operetta Guild's World Premier Reviewed

by AL BERMAN '63
Two new faces were introduced theater this Two new faces were introduced to the world of the theater this past week in the Operetta Guild's production of Thunder In The Hills. Robert Boland and Russell Falvey, both UMass alumni, unveiled a fine musical drama that was unusually superior first production.

The show, of course, did not seem quite as up to par as usual Guild productions, but it must be remembered that previous Guild productions were written by men who have been writing shows for lifetimes: Rodgers and Hammerstein, Jules Styne, Jerome Kern, and the like. For Boland and Falvey, however, it was just the beginning—and a fine beginning it was

The music was thrilling and encompassed all emo-tions. The exciting "Gonna Raise a Roof" and "What were mixed with the inspirational "Creatic and "There's a land". All the winsome hi mor of the hills was captured in "Fruit of the Vine." while the philosophical "When You are Loved" pressed much of the theme of the show.

The story opens in a remote town in the Kentucky Hills just after the Civil War. The townsfolk are preparing to welcome home two local brothers, and the stage comes alive with "What a Day".

During the festivities, we are introduced to Joe e, a man who has been deserted by his wife, and become cruelly rejectful of the townspeople, mostly because they have been scorning him. I audience is shown that Joe (Don Brown) will an important figure later in the story.

The brothers return home, and Tom (Alan Couper) defeats Joe Kane in a wood-chopping contest to win the town beauty, Melissa (Arlaine Anderson), for the upcoming dance. Tom and Melissa soon get married in a wonderful scene where a house is actually built on stage ("Gonna Raise a Roof") reminiscent of the barn-raising scene in Broadway's "Plain and Fancy." Obviously, Joe is extremely jealous of the marriage, because he has loved Melissa, only to have his advances rebuffed.

At this point in the story, a strange change in plot occurs. All along, the audience has been led to believe that Tom and Melissa are the centers of the plot. But now a new, and by far a more impor-tant romance blossoms. Joe Kane's exuberant daughter Margit (Buffy St. Marie) falls in love with Jeb Gentry (Tom Dodge). In her realization of the fact that she hasn't yet been able to get married. ("The Boys I've Met"), Margit works out a plan to snared Jeb ("When I Meet The Boy I Love").

But Jeb decides that he wants to see more of the world and plans to leave the Hills, but promises to return some day to Margit ("There's a Land"). Meanwhile in their cabin, Joe learns from Margit that Melissa would be alone that evening. He dispute that Melissa from Margit and worse to the horne of Margit and worse the health and the horne of Margit and Margit appears from Margit and goes to the ho

In a scene of tremendous tension, Joe goes Melissa and abuses her, but is interrupted by Jeb, who has been living with Tom and Melissa. Jeb advances on Joe with a shotgun, and a fight ensues. The gun goes off accidentally and Jeb is killed.

Immediately the scene shifts to Margit, whence occurs one of the most touching and pathetic scenes in all of the theater. Margit unaware that her father.

Soon, however, the men of the town come armed to apprehend Joe. Margit knows where Joe's special hiding place is in the hills, but she refuses to tell the townspeople where he is.

where the basic question of the plot lies Does she, then, owe more respect to him as her father, or to the memory of her lover that he has father, or to the memory of her lover that he has killed? This question plagues Margit for days ("Duo Soliloquy").

however, the people of the town realize Soon, however, the people of the town realize that by their scorn and rejection of Joe, they have turned him into the misanthrope he has become. The people convince Margit that, although what Joe did was wrong, they feel as much to blame for the calamity, and will not harm Joe, when they find him

The story ends as Margit, unable to find her father, promises to look for him and bring him home. The story is excellent, with great feeling, but much is distracted by the remoteness of the setting. The audience finds it hard to adjust to the setting, and loses a lot of the story in making the adjustment. The authors have tried to combine the vibaldoment. and loses a lot of the story in making the adjust-ment. The authors have tried to combine the ribaldry of "Li'l Abner" with the romance and feeling of "Oklahoma." Indeed Joe Kane bears a remarkable resemblance to "Pore Jud" in the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical

Let us not beat around the bush. It has been proven again and again that the effect of increased radiation upon the body is harmful. The contention that a "threshold" exists above which there will be negligible effects, is, in the minds of a great body of scientists, a fallacy. Indeed, there has not been significant proof of the "threshold" concept to render it valid. But now you ask, "What about the ount of radiation that is in our atmosphere as a matter of natural amount of radiation that is in our atmosphere as a matter of natural fact? Can't this be considered a threshold?

To answer this, let me first submit a few facts:

"Every year about 75,000,000 children are born in the world. About 2% of the children that are born have obvious, serious defects that are due to hereditary to bad genes. Thus about 1,500,000 children with serious hereditary defects are born in the world each year."

Why does this occur? Why does this occur?

Although the complexities of nature cloud over the more intricate of the answers to this problem, one can state that the heredity defects are caused by mutations or changes in the genetic constituents of the body. If we now keep in mind the fact that radiations produce mutations, we can proceed further.

tations, we can proceed further.

Mutations are, in general, harmful. To see this, let us compare parts in an alarm clock to the genes of the human body. Let us that we indiscriminately change a part of the alarm clock. What the chances that this alarm clock will work better? Obviously, the chances are small. In just the same way, what are the chances of a genetic mutation producing a desirable effect? —obviously. So, my friend, you see why the thinking person winces when the A.E.C. speaks 'safe" doses of radiation.

If we say that of the 1,500,000 defective children, 150,000 (10%) erally accepted by most geneticists) are the result of normal back generally accepted by most geneticists) are the result of normal back-ground radiation, what, indeed is to be considered a safe dose? We might even take 1% of 1,500,000 children. This is still 15,000 seriously defective children! Thus I maintain that the very suggestion of a re-sumption of bomb tests (with the obvious results of increased stronti-um—90 and cesium—137 in our atmosphere) constitutes an insult to the fraternity and intelligence of man. When I stated that our principal consideration at the present time is testing and and "wising" principal consideration at the present time is testing and not "using," I was relying on a common theory: obviously, if neither we nor the Russians are testing, a nuclear advantage could not be gained. We must of course, concede that the U.S. and Soviet capabilities are the present on an equilibrium. It is only during this crucial period o equilibrium that agreements can be made. The consequences of an in equilibrium (which is inherent in further nuclear testing by the great powers) are obvious realize that the great argument of Dr. Teller and some of his

I realize that the great argument of Dr. Teller and some of his colleagues is: "How do we know that the Russians aren't testing?"

To this, no layman can give a technically efficient answer. There are of course the two factions on this question: one which says that sensitive seismographs and radiological equipment are sufficient to detect the sense medical sufficient to the sense medical sufficient sufficient to the sense medical sufficient sensitive seismographs and radiological equipment are sufficient to detect even smaller nuclear testing, the other which disputes this. (I might add that both sides have good argument.) Dr. Teller says that to maintain an equilibrium we must test further. I say that this is fallacious in that further testing by the two powers will not maintain an equilibrium of military power but rather an unbalance of such.

EQUILIBRIUM OR ADVANTAGE?

I will now take a significant step. I will tell of other ways.

I will now take a significant step. I will talk of other weapons in addition to the bomb. In the category of these additional weapons one might include nuclear rockets and nuclear submarines or the "carriers of the payload," if you will. In these categories, as well as in other types of weapons, the Soviet Union and the United States are forced not only to maintain an equilibrium but to obtain an advantage.

I will never understand those who say: "We must keep the bomb tool of equilibrium and thus as an effective deterrent." On the ace this is a rational approach. Yet, when you ask them about surface this is a rational approach. Yet, when you ask them about nuclear testing they say: "Well, since we can't trust the Russians, we must constantly improve our weapons."

All right, now let us say both we and the Russians jump into testing. Obviously, in time, one of us will hold a significant advantage. Who will it be?

The whole point of my article is this:

Although at the present there has been no bilateral agreement on weapons testing and disarmament, can we afford to continue this race for the ultimate deterrent, which, in actuality, would become the ultimate weapon? This, of course, must be answered in two parts.

(1) Since we have storned purpose testings that it is not actually the storney of the

we have stopped nuclear testing, we should maintain this position.

Yet, (2) Since no agreement has yet been made of disarmament, we are forced to continue our great expenditures o other than bombs.

But, my friend, remember this. When Mr. Nixon talks of the "absolute and unattackable deterrent", he is in effect, talking through his hat! There is no such thing!!

Thus, it is my contention that the policy of the great powers is Thus, it is my contention that the policy of the great powers is not to bargain from an equal but from an advantageous position. To back this up, I refer you to the two P's: The praise of Dr. Teller (a militant tester) and the persecution of Dr. Pauling (an arch-foe of testing). While Mr. Teller appears on "Meet the Press," Mr. Pauling appears on "Meet the Unamerican Activities Committee."

Disarmament and Outside Pressures

I submit that neither the Soviet Union nor the United States has sincerely pursued the negotiations on disarmament and nuclear con-

sincerely pursued the negotiations on disarmament and nuclear controls. This has, in part, been due to political and economic pressures as well as mutual distrust. Indeed, in the U.S. we are at a vast disadas well as mutual distrust. Indeed, in the U.S. we are at a vast disadvantage since in a great free enterprise system such as ours, lobbyists can exercise considerable pressures on our legislators. Thus, if this mad race for arms continues, a clear-thinking economist would find it difficult to concede that the "military to consumer goods switchover" could be made without the greatest difficulties.

Do not deceive yourself. There are pressures in both countries working frantically against disarmament! We must ease this pressure before it is too late. Indeed, in this "cold war" atmosphere, pressures are rapidly building up. We must turn back before it's too late.

There is no ultimate military deterrent. The only successful deterrent is disarmament along with adequate inspection and controls.

In the long run, this is our only hope.

As a part of the extended Concert Association series, The New Danish Quartet performed here last Tuesday night in Bowker Auditorium. The quartet, a young group of four Danish musicians, sponsored by King Frederick of Denmark, played sponsored by King Frederick of Denmark, played a Mozart quartet, followed by a composition by Niels Viggo Bentzon, a contemporary Danish pian-ist and composer, and ended with a Brahams quar-

Following the usual Mozart style, the Quartet in G major is a very precise, reserved composition, relaxing in a few places to exhibit delicate melodipassages, not contrasting, however, to the rig of the work as a whole. This technical master idity of the work as a whole. This technical master-piece was performed with a well-defined exactness which certainly displayed the ability of the quartet.

Bentzon's Quartet, Opus 124, was an enjoyable from the rigidity of the Mozart, citing thing about this composition was the mar-velous irony which raced through the entire three ments, without regard to customary rhythm, or melody. Throughout the piece, dissonant chords built up to climaxes of catapulting notes falling against one another in a pandemonium of falling against one another in a pandemonium of sound and emotion. Never resting quietly, its mellower moments were interrupted by piercing, questioning chords or low mumbling discordant notes. tioning chords or low mumbling discordant note The difficulty arising in the performance of such work seemed to be effortlessly overcome by the members of the Quartet, who played purposefully and with determination throughout the entire piece.

The selection by Brahms, his Quartet in A vas more perfunctory than Brahms rule although certainly more freely moving than the Mozart quartet. The seeming lack of fullness and the superficiality throughout this four movement work might be due not to Brahms nor to any lack in the Quartet but to the acoustical difficulties in Bowker Auditorium. The heavy, velvet drapes almost surrounding the four musicians may have absorbed most of the fine tones of the instruments rather than allowing them to flow out to the aud-

Though the auditorium was not filled to capacity, the applause for the Quartet brought them to play a delightful melodious encore, which probably a Haydn andante. This airy, free-mofree-moving piece, contrasted quite strongly with the rigore program which preceded it and seemed to deligand relax the audience.

The members of the New Danish Quartet seemed to enjoy performing as much as the audience en-joyed their performance. Thus, they became an in-tegral part of their own music and enhanced its ex-

As a sample of the Concert Association's program for this year, the New Danish Quartet may certainly be classified as fine entertainment. The Association ought to be thanked by the student body and encouraged in their efforts by hearty attendance at the remaining performances of the season.

Soccer Team Downed, 7-0. By Springfield

by DAVE WILLARD '64

On Friday afternoon the U-Mass soccer team was defeated by a strong Springfield College by a strong Springfield College club to the tune of 7-0. Springfield struck early and often as they built up a 4-0 lead at half-time. They slowed down somewhat in the second half as they scored only three goals. This was more than enough, however, to enable the Barons to coast in.

The Redmen couldn't cope with the speedy and agile Springfield

(Continued from page 2) On the whole, however, the story was a good one. The cast-ing could have been better, though. Buffy St. Marie was magnificent as Margit, and stole the show with her vitality and talent. Arlaine Anderson, Alan Couper, and Tom Dodge were adequate in their roles, but didn't project enough warmth and feeling to be convincing.

Don Brown, as Joe Kane, was also admirable, as were several minor characters: Steve Allen in his riotous portrayal of Fess; Karen Canfield as loving and sympathetic Maw; and Judith St. Jean and Paul Cwiklik as the amusing Polly and Robey Pyelitt.

In summary, it seems that the Operetta Guild did not get a chance to show its great talent and ability to perform musicals, when it decided to do an original play. This is nobody's fault. The composers did a good job, but the campus is used to finer things from the Guild. The acting and chorus work was in no way as fine as in last year's production, Bells Are Ringing.

Let us hope that, in the future, the Guild will select vehicles for performance that will be able to show off the amazing ability and potential that Doric Alviani has been giving to the campus for 25

"Given the present widespread shortage of faculty, I should expect a good many faculty mem-bers to leave the University, and I should expect they would leave for a variety of reasons", stated Dean Fred V. Cahill, Jr.

"No place is likely to be congenial to everyone, and all departures are not the clear loss that the individual concerned is likely to think. I have never heard of a university which was able, or was under any obligation, to accept each individual's estimate of his own worth."

Cahill stated that at UMass the roblem of faculty replacement and improvement is rendered very difficult by the salary scale, the teaching loads, research facilities, and the like. "The rate of turn-over here, during the last few years, was not alarming, but the problems of recruitment were

The governor stated that the attempt to establish a Massachusetts State Office Building Association based on the University of Massachusetts Building As-sociation had resulted in the state association being declared unconstitutional. This put a shad-ow on possible further sales of the bonds of the University of Massachusetts Association which was created in the administra-tion of Gov. Leverett Saltonstall in 1939.

The University of Massachusetts Association is in the process of turning over the first ess of turning over the first dormitory facilities built then. The cost has been totally amor-tized through collection of fees from students. In its decision last winter the state Supreme Judicial Court said that there was a difference between a private authority supported by fees paid directly by the state and a private authority sup-ported by fees paid by private citizens, but it would not rule on that question unless the questhat question unless the question came to it.

In his message, Gov. Furcolo called on the Legislature to give a two thirds vote of approval to the earlier actions of the Lowell and University of Massachusetts associations to better support the bond issues already issued and supported by those groups.

He said a bare majority of the UMass. trustees had favored the establishment of a separate authority to continue the construction of the dormitories and other revenue producing facilities at the university.

Opposed by Mahoney

Finally, Comissioner of Administration Charles F. Mahoney recommended "against the creation of a single or super authority" which would "place in the hands of a separate group vital authority affecting admissions and other policies for all of our public higher educational institutions, thus acting, in ef-fect, as a totally independent higher educational authority."

Gov. Furcolo, however, "with-out comment" submitted the University of Massachusetts trustee bill for such an authority and said he would sign it if it contains proper safeguards.

Socialist Candidate Haas To Speak Here

by PAT BARCLAY Collegian Staff Reporter

Eric Haas, the Socialist Labor party candidate for President will speak in the Council Room of the SU on Thursday, October 27 at 8:00 p.m. The 55-year-old editor of the "Weekly People", official newspaper of the Socialist Labor Party was named the Labor Party was named the party nominee for President at a convention in New York City, a convention in New York City, May 8. He was also the party candidate in 1952 and 1956.

Haas is running with Georgia Cozzini, vice-presidental candidate, on a ticket that feels capitalism is doomed and looks on Russia as a bureaucratic despotism that masquerades as socialism. The party is using as its slogan "Vote Under the Arm and Hammer for Plenty, Peace, Haas was born in Lincoln. Nebraska in 1905, of German and Danish immigrant parents. In 1928 he became associated with the Socialist Party. He has also run for governor of New York, U.S. Senator from Oregon and New York and Mayor of New York City, all on the Socialist-Labor ticket.

The vice-presidential candidate is a Milwaukee housewife with two children, one a University of Wisconsin student. She is now on a speaking tour of the Pacific Coast.

The goal of the party is that after being "supported at the polls by the Working-class ma-jority, the elected candidates of the Socialist-Labor Party will take over the political state, not to administer it, but to disband it. The reins of government will simultaneously be passed to the integrally organized Socialist Industrial Union. This is the peaceful and civilized way to accom-plish the Socialist revolution in America so imperatively demanded in this greatest crisis in hu-man history."

Commenting on the candidate, John P. Quinn, local party or-ganizer, said that he had been attracting more response than any time in the past, and that Massachusetts voting totals for the party hold up pretty well. He pinpointed the Boston and Lynn areas as the strongest areas of state support.

Sponsored by the Political Science Association, the public is cordially invited to what prom-ises to be an interesting evening.

Dr. Ricci Comments Upon Men's Physical Education

Dr. Benjamin Ricci of the Men's Physical Education Department is greatly impressing students with his sincerity, vis-ion, and deep interest in student and social affairs. When asked to comment on his popularity, Dr. Ricci stated, "I am very flattered and honored, but I would like to say that an instructor is made by his students, just as a good team makes a good coach. Therefore, I give much credit to the students. I would also like to say that basically, our students are sincere and, by far, very appreciative."

Dr. Ricci seems to enjoy working with youth, particularly those who have had an injustice done to them. "I try to place myself in the other fellow's shoes, and I'm sure the majority has gone away satisfied," Ricci commented.

What Junior Honors? A Query

Last spring the Collegian ran a news item on a junior honors program, which had been proposed and organized by members of the faculty and administration. A further statement about this pursuit of scholasticism had been made, briefly, in the last page of the section, Undergraduate Curricula, in the 1960-61 University Bulletin.

The new program was hailed by the campus community as a major addition to our honors system, which already included an excellent senior honors project programtwo semesters of independent study (under the guidance of an advisor) in the student's major department, culminating in a written paper best described as an undergraduate thesis

When the juniors honors program-Honors 51-was announced no mention was made of the nature of the studies to be undertaken. Only an elusive statement in the Bulletin gave any clue. But, we did have a junior honors program at last! Everyone was pleased. Everyone was satisfied.

Then the matter was dropped.

This fall many interested juniors en-deavored to find out if they qualified for honors work, and, if so, how they could begin to take advantage of the new honors program. Other foresighted students queried their advisors as to how they might prepare to meet the requirements of the program in their junior year. But no one seemed to know any of the answers. True, we had a junior honors program on paper, but, in effect, there was still no such thing.

When will this program be ready for the students' benefit? Will it be open first to the Class of '63 or '64 or? And what shall the requirements be? Students hoping to do honors work ought to know what grades and other recommendations they will need in order to qualify.

When shall we know?

INTELLECTUALISM...GIRLS?

by GENEVIEVE REALL '63"

It is the female student's prerogative to have her books carried for her, to have doors opened for her, to have seats given her, and to be asked on dates. In all of these she is the recipient, not the doer; she is willingly and—if so gifted—fetchingly submissive, not initiative. This is all very well, for where matters concerning female temperament are concerned due respect must be given to her sex. Emotionally and physically a woman is susceptible; therefore a man's sensitivity to or his understanding of this is reflected in his treatment of her from letting her get into the lifeboat first down to opening the car door. These more minor duties seem trivial to a callous masculine temperament, but the more sensitive a man is to a woman emotionally, the more consistently and thoroughly will he attend to these small deeds of chivalry. He does not let her walk before him to her seat at a public function because she might get lost behind him, but because he observes the principle of her relative inferiority in regard to stability of emotions and physical strength. He does not open the car door because she has not figured out how to use the handle, but because he is overtly giving recognition to her dependent status as a woman. And, let's face it, girls, we are dependent. But not altogether.

And this is the gist of a contemporary problem between the sexes. Temperament and physical stamina are confused with intellectual stamina. Boys lift an eyebrow or assume amused tolerance if a girl asserts an idea with any force of conviction. I remember a Christmas party of recent years; the room was populated with Yale and Smith students. The girls sat around gossiping or chatting lightly with the boys. The boys puffed their pipes and bantered with as much facile obscenity as they could. Almost unoberved a group of boys gathered in a corner to criticize the educational system, specifically political science courses. Spurred by un-feminine enthusiasm I hurried over and spoke out in ringing tones. There was masculine chuckling and something like a gentle suggestion to go chase myself. This did not crush me, but kindled my agitation. What finally made me slink away was the opprobrium in pencilled eyes across the room. Apparently they gave this behavior as little sanction as did the boys.

Is this attitude realistic? If a man found it humiliating, say, to lose a boxing-match with a woman he would be justified. But an unhealthy association has been built up in our society between masculine strength of body and strength of mind, between his stability of temperament and accuracy of thought. If a man finds it painful to lose an argument with a woman he is—among other things—a bigot. Is he debating to score a victory or to achieve a truth? Most would claim the latter. If so, why the humiliation? Probably because he cannot reconcile his consciousness of her as both a woman and as an intel lectual opponent. He thinks his debating with her is as much a test of his male-ness as being able to climb a mountain quicker or better. What a pity that sexual differences should affect the validity of our attitude

Hopefully, I speak for all women who take a serious interest in the intellectual life when I say mental fallibility is no reflection on maleness. Of course, a woman likes to think that the man she is interested in can cerebrate more lucidly than she can. But, on the whole, intellectual argument can and should be taken for what it is: not a battle of the sexes but a striving towards a mutual objective of truth.

Such an attitude must, of necessity, arise in society. The role of woman is being so transformed that, hopefully, she will someday be more than an instrument of procreation, pleasure, and practicality whose interest in academics is purely secondary. She may even pro duce better children and run a better home if her wits, then, are as sharp as her wiles today. But she will not be the less feminine for it.

HOPE FOR JOHNNY

To the Editor:

There is good news and a bright future ahead for Johnny—you know, the one who can't read. He CAN have a college education—at UMass, where the librarians will be delighted to see him. They certainly don't like those of us who CAN read.

It seems to me that our new library has been built solely for the benefit of the library staff. When a student attempts (heaven forbid, but some do!) to take out a book, he is treated like the case-hardened criminal they think he is. To get a book, it is first necessary to fill out a call-slip, complete with every number on the card in the card catalogue, even the number of pages, the year of publication, and any other numbers you can find. Look closely for them—turn the card over, too—because if you don't have a whole lot of nice numbers, you won't get anything! It doesn't matter if the title or author are given; no librarian can read WORDS: all author are given; no librarian can read WORDS; all they can read are NUMBERS.

After you hand this little slip in, you are given a close scrutiny by the warden—er, librarian. If you look respectable enough, they will go and look for your book. When they return an hour later, the chances are 9 out of 10 you will hear one of 4 things: "It's on reserve." "It's out." "It's been reported missing." Or simply—and best of all—"I don't know where it is."

If by any strange chance the book IS in, you are If by any strange chance the book IS in, you are allowed to take it out—AFTER you submit to an investigation by the CIA, House Un-American Activities Committee, FBI, and all other pertinent organizations. When you've received your security clearance, you show the librarian the sacred ID card, SIGN your name on the blue card, and PRINT it on the white card.

You may then, having spent half an hour, take ur book and leave.

Cynically yours.

CRITICISM CRITICIZED

To the Editor:

The Operetta Guild would like to thank you for The Operetta Guild would like to thank you for your review of Thunder in the Hills. It was essentially valid, but we feel the need to clarify one main objective. Your reviewer said in a sense we fell short of Broadway, we know this; but we want to make a place for original theatre at the University. His final paragraph expressed a desire to see the Guild return to the old guard of tried musical theatre. This is an injustice to the university and educational theatre.

The people who worked for five strenuous weeks The people who worked for five strenuous weeks to produce, write, direct, act and build were doing all this for the first time. They had no Broadway production to copy or use as a crutch. This was an attempt by University people to create an original; the Guild has done a far greater thing to further artistic potential than ever before. Is it not better to create from your own mind and heart, and bring to the campus the fruit of our own vine than to forever remain static and complacent because of the success of professional people and Broadway?

As manager of the Operetta Guild I want every-one associated with Thunder in the Hills and every-one who saw it to know that the University of Mas-sachusetts can be proud that there are students and alumni who have the ability to create an original

Sincerely,

Judith St. Jean '61

Editor's Note:

It seems that you have misunderstood my mean-It seems that you have misunaerstood my meen-in. I am all for giving untried theater a chance, and I think that Thunder In The Hills was unusually fine for a first production (as I hope you under-I think that Thunder In The Hills was unusually fine for a first production (as I hope you understood from my review). I also think that the Guild was right in experimenting and that, in truth, the campus should take pride in the originality of the show. My only suggestion was that since the Operetta Guild has continually shown the ability to produce "tried musicals," it ought to continue to produce them, since no "first" can ever be expected to match the quality of a polished show. The Guild experimented, and rightly so, but there are other organizations on campus that produce originals, so why not prove that the Guild is capable of greater things?

A FRAT TO REMEMBER

Every year, as we all know, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Collegiate Fraternities awards a highly coveted prize to the fraternity house which, in its judgment, has done the most to promote and enhance the fraternity way of life. The prize this year—eight hundred pounds of white putty—goes to the Signa Phi Nothing chapter of the South Dakota College of Dentistry and Renaissance Art.

The award this year is exceptionally richly deserved, for the Signa Phi Nothing house is the very model of all a fraternity should be. It is, first of all, a most attractive house physically. The outside walls are tastefully covered with sequins. Running along the upper story is a widow's walk, with a widow stationed every three feet. Moored to the chimney pot is the Graf Zeppelin.

Indoors, the house gives an impression of simple, casual charm. The chapter room is furnished in homey maple and chintz, with a dash of verve provided by a carp pool three hundred feet in diameter. A waterspout rises from the center of the pool with the housemother bouncing on the top.

Members' rooms are gracious and airy and are provided with beds which disappear into the wall—permanently. Each room also has a desk, a comfortable chair, a good reading lamp, and a catapult for skeetshooting. Kidney-shaped desks are available for kidney shaped more larger than the control of the control able for kidney-shaped members.

Perhaps the most fetching feature of the house are the packs of Marlboros stacked in heaps wherever one goes. If one wishes to settle back and enjoy a full-flavored smoke, one needs only to reach out one's hand in any direction and pick a pack of Marlboros soft walk of first or here. Marlboros—soft pack or flip-top box—and make one's self comfortable with a filtered cigarette with an unfiltered taste—that triumph of the tobacconist's art, that paragon of smokes, that acme of cigarettes, that employer of mine-Marlboro!

The decor, the grace, the Marlboros, all combine to make Signa Phi Nothing a real gas of a fraternity. But a fraternity is more than things; it is also people. And it is in the people department that Signa Phi Nothing really shines.

Signa Phi Nothing has among its members the biggest BMOCs on the entire campus of the South Dakota College of Dentistry and Renaissance Art. There is, for instance, William Makepeace Sigafoos, charcoal and bun chairman of the annual Makepeace Sigajoos, charcoal and bun chairman of the annual Stamp Club outing. Then there is Dun Rovin, winner of last year's All-South Dakota State Monopoly Championship, 135 Pound Class. Then there is Rock Schwartz, who can sleep standing up. Then there is Tremblant Placebo, who can crack pecans in his armpits. Then there is Ralph Tungsten, who went bald at eight

But why go on? You can see what a splendid bunch of chaps there is in Signa Phi Nothing, and when one sees them at the house in the cool of the evening, all busy with their tasks—some picking locks, some playing Jacks-or-Better, some clipping Playboy—one's heart fills up and one's eyes grow misty, and one cannot but give three cheers and a tiger for Signa Phi Nothing, fraternity of the year!

And while you're cheering, how about a huzzah for the new-est member of the Marlboro family of fine cigarettes—unfit-tered, mild, delightful Philip Morris king-size Commander b Have a Commander—welcome aboard!

Suffolk completely dominated the second half. Its first tally came after only three minutes of play. Bob Kirk took the snap from center Walters, pitched to his halfback Twohig who then lateralled back to Kirk who scooted down the sidelines for the touchdown. The conversion failed.

Adams made some serious reats with quarterback Tony Sabatinelli throwing some fine passes to Dave Fierra, Legro, and John Larson.

Suffolk's third and final score came on a short pass from quar-terback Kirk to end Robert Look. The point after was unsuccessful as Suffolk shut out Adams 18-0.

DRAKES WIN

The Drakes won their game over the T-Squares by a score of 7-0 by forfeit.

In the night's third game an undefeated Tippers squad was defeated by a strong Patriots team, 12-9, in a closely contested con-

In the first half the Tipper's four-one one offense proved too much for the opposition as Tracy Osgood broke through the Pat line to tag quarterback y Brown for the safety. At the half the Tippers led, 2-0.

The second half was quite dif-ferent than the first as a spirited spirited Patriots team scored first.

After a series of short pass plays to Phil Mallet and Red McDeoit, quarterback Brown let loose with a bullet pass right in-to the hands of halfback Larry Newy. To clinch a forty yard drive quarterback Dave Bader looped a pass over the interference to center Tracy Osgood for the score. The point after was made on a pass from Bader to his halfback Street.

The Tippers led 9-6 until there were six seconds remaining. A tremendous drive was climaxed with only six seconds to go when quarterback Jimmy Brown heaved quarterback Jimmy Blown hearts a thirty yard pass to his right end Dave Bates. The point after was blocked by Street as the Patriots upset the Tippers, 12-9.

In Tuesday night's final game eler Dorm edged out Butterfield by a score of 21-14.

The first half was very closely ontested as each team scored once. Pete O'Sullivan hit his end Hal Colten who dived over to give Butterfield the opening touchdown. Ron Rainka caught the point after on a looping pass from O'Sullivan.

Wheelers tally came late in the half on a short pass to end Pete Chaison who charged down the sidelines for the score.

Quarterback Johnny Mastone arew a hard pass to Fred Koenig for the extra point. The score stood at 7-7 at the half.

Billy McGregor dominated the second half for Wheeler scoring once and making two conversions.

Report On Boston U.

After a light lunch was served, Chet Gladchuk opened the program by reminding the fans that "a victory is a victory." The line coach said that many UM supporters were disappointed with porters were disappointed with the scoring differential of the recent game; but that the Huskies defended against us very well and that gave us plenty of Coach MacPherson his observations on BU, a team he has seen in action for the past he has seen in action for the past three weeks. The Terriers will be at home, hoping to shake the stinging effects of their 1-4-1 record. The only team that both UMass and BU have faced is UConn; the Redmen were tram-pled by the Nutmeggers, 31-0; and the Terriers were edged last and the Terriers were edged last week, 16-14.

Boston University is staffed with a large, veteran line and a predominantly sophomore back-field. The principal threat in the running attack is Dick Desmarias, who has averaged five yards a carry this season. Frequently the 5-10 left halfback, as well as the other backs, have found running room through the tackle slots.

The passing attack, the Terriers' big weapon, is led by Jack Farland and Paul Squarcia, who have teamed for 426 yards thus far. The quarterbacks have been hitting their receivers consistent-ly, but many times the ends have had trouble finding the handle.

The BU kicking and kick off return game is about the same as ours so the Redmen don't an-ticipate too much trouble in these departments.

MacPherson concluded by saying that BU has better material than we do. However, he also believes that, "we can beat them if we play as well as we did at Harvard. If we don't, it will be a long afternoon."

Campaign Summary Flanders Final Topic

by DIANE TOVET '64

Senator Flanders ended his series of political lectures with a careful resume of the President careful resume occurrence has been the objectivity of newspaper reporting. While in the Editorial sections of various national papers little campaigning has other than to indicate the party preference of the paper, the keenest comments have come from the columnists.

TV Nixon Blunder

Another unprecedented event was the television appearance of the two candidates. An article from John Crosby's column, read by Senator Flanders, stated that the television debates have been a tactical mistake of vast imortance for Nixon.

Crosby suggests that "the stage is all set for the man on the out-side, rather than for the man on the inside". On television, Kennedy, the relatively unknown man, is the focus of attention, simply because of the public's unfamiliarity with him.

Islands Small Issue

Flanders also pointed out that certain issues have been blown up beyond their importance in these debates. As an example, he used the current fervor concerning the international situation. The views of the two candidates concerning the Quemoy-Matsu problem have been discussed at great length by many people, yet, stated Flanders it is a relatively small issue. Of further importance in the campaign has been the economic problem. Flanders doesn't see the present situation as optimistically as Nixon does. However, he gets "cold shivers" whenever he thinks of Kennedy invoking the Roose-velt image in economics, or for that matter in any other situa-

Each candidate has attempted Each candidate has attempted to take an image of another man during this campaign. Unfortunately, in Flanders' opinion, Kennedy has adopted a Roosevelt image. It would be impossible, in Flanders' opinion, for anyone to take the place of Eisenhower in the hearts of the

Classes Scheduled On Holidays

Holidays or no holidays? That is the question. Or rather, that was the question until the administration announced that University students, beginning in the fall of 1961, would no longer have a day off when holidays fall in the middle of the week.

Popular sentiment, popular indignation, was aroused when the Collegian published a statement earlier this week concerning class scheduling for the academic year 1961-62. Provost Shannon McCune confirmed a rumor that holidays—namely, Columbus Day, Washington's Birthday, Patriot's Day, and Memorial Day—falling on weekdays will no longer be holidays for University students.

To most of us this came as a surprise. With emotions quickly excited, the arguments presented to justify this change in policy were not too con-vincing. Now we'd like to take a second look.

During the calendar scheduling last spring posal had been brought before the registrati proposal had been brought before the registration board to do away with class-less days. Perhaps this was an easy solution to the difficult problem of balancing the required number of class hours per semester. In the past it has been necessary to juggle days around; this difficulty may be noted, for instance, with this year's classes that fall on Friday, Nov. 11, Veteran's Day. They will have to be pushed about to Tuesday the following week. ad to Tuesday, the following week.

This appears to be a problem in the manipulation of classes and days. Drawing from this, one of the arguments in favor of no holiday holidays is that of lab scheduling which almost invariably finds itself upset and confused. The continuity of the lab series is broken down. Thus, having regularly scheduled classes would accommodate lab periods.

Another argument in defense of this new calendar idea might be called the "spirit of a holiday", from a statement made by Dr. McCune in the Monday news article. Must we, as students, have a vacation in order to realize the spirit behind these state declared holidays? The Provost has suggested that special convocations and appropriate cises, instead, would be held on these days.

We might consider at the same time the fact that the other colleges of the four college community all hold classes on these middle-of-the-week holidays. This, however, calls to mind one question. Because we are a state institution, is it "legal" to hold classes, or exams, as the case may be, on a holiday such as Memorial Day?

When Dr. McCune was asked about this change in policy, he seemed surprised that the student body has raised objections. He commented, in effect, that there would be little reason for the students to have these vacations, that our purpose here is to learn and that we would not be taking advantage of every opportunity offered by the University should the holidays continue. Should anyone wish to take a day in observance of the holiday, he added he may so just by cutting classes.

The length of the academic year is considered of the most important arguments. Students, it seems, have complained in the past that the school year extending into June makes it difficult to obtain or start on summer jobs.

Now, are you convinced? The Collegian would e now to hear the views of the campus.

Finally, in closing we would like to raise these estions. Don't the counseling days upset the nedule just as much as the four holidays during the year? And, why couldn't the student body be informed about a motion for policy change, such as this, previous to its ratification and adoption?

Letters To The Editor

Survival Is The Issue

At no other time in the history of civilization has there existed such a great possibility that the human race will be annihilated as today. "This conclusion is based on a sober and realistic appraisal of a situation that actually exists and from which no one can hide. The whole human race is poised on the razor edge of nuclear catastrophe. As each day ends with the missiles resting on their launching pads, the danger is so much greater that the next will witness the outbreak, by accident or design, of a suicidal nuclear war."

And what solutions to this critical situation have the status quo major parties presented to the public? More destructful weapons has been their shout. These are the fear-ful conditions which have brought Mr. Eric Hass, the presi-dential candidate of the Socialist Labor Party, the largest and most attentive audiences of the post war era.

Mr. Hass who spoke in the Council Chambers of the S.U. last night at eight o'clock knew the reasons why the outmoded Capitalism, which both Mr. Nixon and Mr. Kennedy represent cannot deliver us from this pressing dilemma. The main reason that the capitalist cannot design a plan of peace lies in the fact that the "Cold War" has really been the hotin. No one can deny the fact that our economic system is engaged in a fierce competitive struggle with the Soviet imperialistic system. To the capitalist and the Soviet Despotic rulers there is no other need so urgent as the expansion of their overseas outlets for surplus goods, that are the result of the exploitation of the workers.

The only hope of the survival of the human race under the present conditions lies within the program which Mr. Hass presented, Mr. Hass has spoken before numerous audiences of college students throughout the country for the last 15 years and his arrival here was long overdue, Anyone including economics professors, who heard Mr. Hass speak, knows that Mr. Hass is an authority on Marxist economics and that his organization and presentation of the S.L.P.'s program make him the most interesting and best qualified presidental candidate in America,

THE CAMPAIGN

by PETER WATSON '61

Though all polls and predictions still rate the election a toss-up, a curious fact is that the closeness is in the winner, not the margin. The prevailing mood seems to be that it is roughly 50-50 that Vice President Nixon will win by a close margin. Similarly, Senator Kennedy's chances are rated 50-50. The incongruity is that if he wins he's expected to win not by a small margin, but by a BIG one.

How this seeming disparity has come about is yet to be explained. An examination of the last month may indicate

One month ago Vice President Nixon looked not safe, but ahead and strong. He had the issues of peace and prosperity—thought superficial by many—yet strong slogans, He had a young opponent susceptible to the charge of immaturity. was about to debate this young man. He was "the maste debater". He was confident.

The first debate found the master debater taking a ba beating from a young man who no longer looked young. A trend began. Senator Kennedy administered no more undebatable defeats, but—more important—he lost none of the advantage that accrued to him after the first.

Senator Kennedy, in destroying in large part the charge of immaturity and inexperience, seemed to take the heart out of the Republican campaign. The theme and continuity seem misplaced, if not lost Recently a pro-Nixon editorialist wrote on this point, lamenting the fact that Nixon had let his campaign get away from him. He stated that if Kennedy had the issues of peace and prosperity he would "make then sound beautiful". He was distressed to find that even these were somehow bland-lacking in appeal.

The Republican campaign seems to give the impression of desperation—much like a hurt fighter looking for the one big punch, and all the while being steadily pummelled by an aggressive opponent. This has manifested itself in the Quemoy-Matsu controversy, the Cuban controversy, and threats at the opening of the religious issue.

Simultaneously, the polls have been mounting for Ken-nedy, the renegade Democrats have been breaking all speed records back to the fold, and the Kennedy crowds have been increasing in size and enthusing

All recent polls have been Kennedy. The most significant has been New York. It is not surprising to find Kennedy ahead; what is surprising is his strong running in traditionally Republican Westchester County. Although Nixon is ahead, it is by a far lesser margin than would be expected. THE RENEGADE DEMOCRATS

Senators Frank Lausche and Herman Talmadge, of Ohio and Georgia, respectively, jumped into line so fast they almost went out the other side. A renegade can afford to back—directly or indirectly—an Eisenhower, but not a man who looks as if he might lose.

THE CROWDS

Though size is deceptive (scheduling a noon rally at a busy intersection can swell the crowd.) there can be no doubt

Tough Luck, Johnny

To: Subversive student, one who reads but cannot write Dear Uninformed:

There is nothing exceedingly complex about the systemed in Goodell Library. The procedure, as succinctly outlined below is amazingly simple.

To obtain a book one first must approach the card catalogue, where every book in the library is filed alphabetically by author, title, and subject. Having found the desired book, one takes a white slip provided for the purpose and fills it out properly with the call number, title and author given on the card. This involves the relatively simple process of copying; however, 80 percent of supposedly "missing" books are found to be nonexistent, as the call numbers are incorrect!

From the card catalogue, one proceeds to the Circulation Desk where one hands the slip to the librarian or student assistant. If this form is correctly made out, the attendant will promptly bring you your book or, if it has been checked out to another party (non-subversive, I hope), he will helpfully offer to save the book for you.

My answer to the "On Reserve" or "missing" problem is this: Books are set aside as reserved so that when you wish to study from them they are readily available and not checked out. Books are classified as missing because you have neglected to return them.

It is evident that this "subversive student" is completely It is evident that this "subversive student" is completely ignorant concerning library technique. The "investigation" by "pertinent organizations", (eg. F.B.I., CIA, etc.) which she (or he) facetiously refers to are the figments of a limited imagination. It appears that "S.S.", who prides himself upon his reading ability, is obviously lacking the accompanying talent of being able to write. This is why the library requests that you PRINT on one of the cards, so that your name is legible! Showing one's I.D. card each time is a protection for you as a student, a system which is followed all over campus and need not be elaborated upon.

I am sure the LIBRARIAN would be very willing to talk anyone who wishes to offer constructive comments on how to improve our Library.

Chorale Concert -A REVIEW

by JUDITH ST. JEAN

The University Chorale presented an excellent concert to sparse but receptive audience. My main criticism cannot aimed at the Chorale but at the Student Body who did not take advantage of this performance.

The Chorale in its selection of music is still focused too much on the classical to appeal to the general public; and the attempt to be less steeped in classical tradition included light hearted madrigals which were well executed and delightful, but not the necessary ingredient to stimulate the palate

I felt the Bach Cantata which opened the concert was the least appealing, but a difficult undertaking for any group. The soloists were excellent, Miss Lee Carlson, was one of the most exciting sopranos that the Chorale has produced in recent years. The men, Donald Paine, Curtis Paine, and John Knechel were also commendable, and the accompanist, Merilee Atkins, was excellent.

I was very pleased to hear Mr. Elliott Schwartz, a new professor in the music department, perform a short piano recital. We were especially fortunate to hear "Nocturn", one of his original compositions, Mr. Schwartz seems very interested in the campus and its development of musical tastes. Ann Shutty, as student conductor, once again displayed her skill in directing. The Chorale which is a group of great size performed under her direction with great alacrity.

Another pleasing aspect of the concert was the fact that most of it was performed without reference to music. This is a great improvement over past concerts, the Chorale was able to direct their attention to watching the director and thinking about what and how they were singing. Dr. King, soloists, student conductor, accompanists, and the whole Chorale are to be congratulated for a fine performance and excellent musicianship. excellent musicianship.

that the Kennedy crowds have been tremendous in size and enthusiasm. More than anything else, their value is one of creating an impression of a bandwagon.

creating an impression of a bandwagon.

Indeed, this image of a rolling bandwagon seems to be at the heart of the disparity mentioned above. All the components to a runaway bandwagon are there—yet the bandwagon is not. For three weeks the Kennedy bandwagon has been threatening a breakaway. For three weeks Nixon has held it on the brink.

In light of this, the incongruity fades. Now the election is close—close to being even—close to being a landslide.

HAMLIN

Two Hamlin girls have been honored by the 4-H Club. Myrna Anderson was selected State Dairy Winner and will be travel-ing to Chicago the week after Thanksgiving to attend the National 4-H Club Congress. Christine McQuaid, who was chosen State Dairy Princess in June, will be in Chicago next week to compete for the title of American Dairy Princess.

Martha Ronan was selected by Hamlin to be the dorm candidate for the Military Ball and Carol Guerrette was nominated by Al-pha Epsilon Pi to be their entry in this contest.

The Sophomore Executive Council has two representatives from Hamlin—Joan Hussey and Linda Pollack. In addition, Betsy Robicheou was elected to the Women's Affairs Committee.

Two of our senior counselors, Carol Jones and Carol Menter were elected to the senior honor society, Phi Kappa Phi.

Hamlin had a large number of sorority pledges: Nancy Sher-man, Sondra DelaVega, and Nancy Kenyon to Kappa Alpha Theta; Joan Dickson and Sheila Keblin to Gamma Chi Alpha; Betsy Robicheou to Kappa Kap-

Color Favorites Change In The Next Five Years Chicago (UPI)—A designer of wallcoverings, Jack Denst, foresees a return in the next five years to the plush reds and greens of the Victorian era in me decor.

He expects women to take readily to the lavish use of these colors. "Women are becoming increasingly conscious that they look best against a dark, rich background," he said.

Denst makes color predictions studying the color wheel. ed and green are immediately adjacent to the colors on the wheel which are presently fashionable, and the public's tastes on color almost always follow the order of color on the wheel," he

A true color period, as opposed to a fad such as the pink and black combination, generally stays in vogue for a period equivalent to the space it occu-pies on the color wheel," he said. "Red and green — large seg-ments on the wheel—can be ex-pected to remain popular for sev-eral years after they come into usage."

Orange, yellow and other colors that zoomed into vogue for only a short time were doomed to a brief life by their small segments on the color wheel, he said.

Denst tries to predict the fiveyear probabilities in color trends because he needs that long to come up with wallcoverings in the new colors.

He predicted that red and green decorating schemes would begin showing up in soft shades of rose and possibly khaki green, which would gradually give way to deeper colors. The true blues and purples now in vogue came into usage this way, he said They appeared first in aqua, tur-quoise and lavender.

NAME: John Hulse AGE: 27 MAJOR: Bus. Adm. PRESENT JOB: Telephone Manager, Sioux City, Iowa

When John Hulse was a senior at the U. of South Dakota, he had his own set of "do's" and "don'ts." Don't become a mere cipher on somebody's payroll. Don't sit on the shelf waiting for your first taste of responsibility. Do get a job where you have a chance to show your stuff right from the start. Do the job.,

John knew his B.S. in Business Administration could lead him into almost any field. He chose the telephone business and joined Northwestern Bell.

One of his first assignments: streamlining operating procedures for the telephone offices of Iowa's five largest cities. In this work John showed good judgment and sound organizing ability.

Today he is Telephone Manager of Sioux City, Iowa.

Besides managing day-to-day operations, helping plan tomorrow's telephone growth is an important part of John's job. A typical example is the work he does with the Sioux City Industrial Development Association. In this role he's the answer man on projecting, planning and supplying the communications needs of new industry. He's shown above with Bob Sweeney, manager of the Sioux City Chamber of Commerce.

"You must always be thinking of the future in this business," John says. "We have to stay ahead. I think a man who has something to offer this outfit won't have a minute's worry about what it can do for him."

Prof. W. G. O'Donnell. Delivers Paper In N.Y.

Walter G. O'Donnell, Professor of Management at the University of Massachusetts presented a scientific paper before the International Meeting of the Institute of Management Sciences in New York City this week, dealing with "Values and Value Judgments in Managerial Decisions."

The Institute is an international scientific society devoted to better understanding of the problems arising in connection with the management of organizations. Its members, numbering approximately 3000, come from many industrialized countries and include outstanding scholars in several scientific fields as well as business executives.

O'Donnell had been induced by the officers of this professional society to make use of the occasion to organize a "Philosophy of Management" section among some of the members. In letters sent out to accomplish this purpose, he wrote ". . With ends as well as means attracting increasing attention from managers and scientists, it appears timely and urgent for an organized group of professionals to exchange ideas, pool their findings, and systematically promote a more rigorous inquiry into the actualities of value phenomena in managerial processes."

Pointing to the growing volume of management literature concerned with managerial phicosophy, corporate objectives, the goals of motivation and leadership, and the scales of value used in corporate decisions, he stressed the crucial importance of combining systematic studies of social ethics with the dynamics of organizations in order to assure the advancement and survival of our civilization: "When advances in technology have reached the point at which a push-button, wrongly pushed, can set in motion a release of forces that can exterminate the human race, is it not high time—or awfully late—for us to attend to the human purposes and values by which men hope to live, so that our powerful mechanisms can be made more assuredly the controlled instruments of man's amelioration?

In his intensive research during recent years in the corporate decision-making process, O'Donnell has found among top-level decision-makers a ready recognition of ethical factors in complex corporate decisions. He has found a kind of associational ethic emerging from the requirements of cooperative activity in such organizations. He finds that responsible executives not only endeavor to conform to a complex code of morals in the broader culture, but create moral codes for others within the organization. In this sense, everything which makes for group solidarity in the organization and constrains men to take account of other men and regulate their conduct through something other than the striving of the ego takes on a moral character.

Noting the rapid strides being made in mechanistic devices in industrial organizations, he argued for a balancing re-emphasis on qualities, values, and purposes, maintaining that "Purpose is implemented by mechanism, so the payoff from the highly efficient employment of these advanced techniques can be no better than the values anticipated by human judgment . . . It is in the realm of values that men get their directions. Modern scientific management is advancing along a three-lane highway in process of construction. The purposive lane is just beginning to be built or re-built. The behavioral lane, founded on the social sciences, is well under way, but still far behind the technological lane which is based upon the physical sciences. Congestion in the traffic of ideas and applications results from this lack of balanced construction."

Newspaper Staff Protests Censorship At California

Berkeley, Cal. (UPS) — The entire editorial board of the Daily Californian, student newspaper on the Berkeley campus, resigned Monday following a three day battle between the paper and Berkeley's student government.

The move was followed by mass resignations from all campus student publications in retaliation against actions taken by the Executive Committee (ExCom) of the Associated Students, University of California at Berkeley in suppressing the paper's freedom.

Yesterday (Monday) students formed an ad hoc committee for the preservation of a free and in-

Student judiciary sustained its temporary injunction on Saturday morning prohibiting hearings on grounds that they were actually summary actions to be taken by a legislative body.

Following this decision, ExCom again met in emergency session and decided not to suspend the staff, but to revise the paper's by-laws. Staffers recruited by ExCom are still publishing the Daily Californian, while the old staff is editing The Independent Californian at 2153 Vine Street in Berkeley.

The University administration has not yet entered the fray, but may soon be pulled into the fight. A newly formed graduate students' association on campus has petitioned the chancellor for suspension of ExCom rulings on graduate representation on ExCom on grounds that 43 percent of the Daily Californian's contributors were graduate students. California President Clark Kerr denied representation for graduate students last fall.

Mrs. Helen E. Helbling Is Honored With Tea At SAE

The brothers of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, last Sunday presented a Tea in honor of their new resident hostess, Mrs. Helen E. Helbling.

Mrs. Helbling is a native of Pittsburgh, Pa. Her husband has been employed at Blaw-Knox Steel Co. in Pittsburgh for 25 years and is now General Manager of that company.

Mrs. Helbling has two daughters, Mrs. E. R. Burchell who is the wife of the Rev. Mr. Burchell of the Pittsfield First Congregational Church.

Mrs. Burchell attended Ohio

The most reasonable device would be a proximity detector to record the approach of a nearby object by means of a shift in the signal frequency sent by the rocket, the scientists said.

Folk Society Plans Sing For Tonight

An informal folk sing will highlight the meeting of the Amherst Folklore Society at 8 p.m. Wesleyan. Her other daughter, Mrs. H. Porter attended Pittsburgh Univ. and is now a school teacher in Clinton, N. J.

Mrs. Helbling is no newcomer to campus life and activity. She graduated from Duffs College in Pittsburgh and has been a housemother for 16 years at 3 different colleges—Baldwin Wallace, Carnegie Tech, and Ohio Wesleyan. She has six grandchildren, the oldest, who is studying law, is a senior at George Washington. Two other grandchildren have just entered college, one at Lycoming in Pa. and the other at Wentworth in Boston.

Mrs. Helbling is an avid sports fan and is particularly proud of her hometown team, the Pittsburgh Pirates. The brothers and Mrs. Helbling would also like to express many thanks for the wonderful turnout Sunday and to all the guests who welcomed her with a long and pleasant stay.

UMass Seen Underdogs In Clash With Hungry Terriers

Delnickas, Gazourian And Lussier Named Starters

The University of Massachusetts faces one of the season's most formidable opponents tomorrow when it tangles with Boston University on the latter team's home field. A near capater of the control of the contro city homecoming throng is expected to be on hand for the 1:30 p.m. kickoff.

And So It Happened

It wasn't good weather for the Redmen last year, either physically or poetically, for they were defeated by Coach Steve Sinko's BU Terriers 20-6 in front of 2500 drenched fans at alumni field. Charlie O'Rourke's squad watched B.U. run all over them during the first half, the Terriers scoring all of their points during that period. When the second stanza came by the Redmen made a weak bounce back to score their lone touchdown, Although we can't make any promises about the weather (physical), hope can be offered for the other weather, for this year's UMass squad is the best we've seen since 1946, and could be the best since the turn of the century.

Cross Country Squad Prepared For YanCon Championship Meet

The University of Massachu-setts' varsity cross-country team will enter the Yankee Conference six team meet this Saturday afternoon at Kingston, Rhode Island, with confidence that they will be in the thick of the fight for top honors

A three-way battle for the title is anticipated by YanCon officials in this, the 13th annual YanCon meet, a meet which is held over a four and one half mile, hilly course.

The defending champs from the University of Maine are slight favorites to retain their title but either UMass or New Hampshire could easily upset the predictions. Vermont and Connecticut do not figure to be as strong as the top three but could cause trouble. Undermanned Rhode Island is not a contender.

Coach Bill Footrick's harriers have scored a clean 15-50 sweep over Union College and lost to over Union College and lost to Harvard University, 41-20. A crowd of twenty thousand should be on hand at Boston Uni-versity field to witness the B.U. homecoming clash with The Red-men from Massachusetts, tomor-

Coach Chuck Studley's crew will be entering the game with a chance to be the winningest Redmen team since 1901, when they finished with a 9-1 season.

But the Mass gridmen will ave to improve over their showing last week against Northeastern if they expect to give B.U. a run for its money. The Redmen were two touchdown favorites over the Huskies and could barely

To this writer's eyes it was the line, both offensive and defensive, which gave UMass most of its trouble. Both Conway and Mc-Cormick were constantly being rushed and didn't have enough time to be very effective. Half-back Sam Lussier, who usually picks up an average of 4.5 yards on his carries, was repeatedly hit in attempting to get through his right tackle slot. The only time he did open up was on a wide open play. Sam set up the lone UMass T.D. on that one,

It must be mentioned, how-ever, that the Huskey line was powerful, and didn't give UMass much of a chance to equal their past line performances.

The Terriers will be looking for their second win of the season in this, the fifth regular UMass-B.U. encounter. (B.U. beat us last year, 20-6.) Let's hope that Coach Studley and retinue will be up for the game as well as they were for Harvard.

Our cross town neighbors will be out to stop Tufts' unbeaten string, and they can do it. The Lord Jeffs have upset Tufts be-fore. In 1956 the men from Bos-ton were one touchdown away from an unbeaten season, but lost to Amherst. In '57 both teams were unbeaten when they clashed, and the Jeffs won that one too.

It doesn't look as if the old jinx will work this year, though. Harry Arlanson's squad looks to be too tough, having scored 127 points to 21 for the opposition.

There's been some talk lately of B.C.'s playing out of its class, They've lost four out of their five games, tying VMI last week. The Eagles, however, are still rated tops in New England. Their games haven't been runaways, and they almost upset high-flying Syracuse. Its an interesting topic at any rate, and the Eagles will be out to prove

Frosh Booters Defeat Connecticut Squad, 4-3

by MIKE BJORNHOLM '64

The UMass soccer team made good their trip to Connecticut Wednesday, as they whipped UConn 4-3.

Our boys got off to a slow start, and after three quarters of the first period were behind 1-0. They then bombarded the UConn goalie, resulting in three goals within 10 minutes.

Dick Repeta, playing his usual fine game, put his talented foot to good use as he tied the score. Taki Argentínis and Dick Leete followed suit with a goal apiece before UConn could recover and score for the hone crowd.

Dick Leete notched another goal in the third period to finish UMass' scoring. Connecticut got their last one late in the final

After displaying a fine offense in the first half, the Frosh concentrated on defense in the second. They repeatedly held off the charging UConn line. When they did get by our forwards, goalie Eric Granger made difficult stops look easy.

Beside continuing their win-ning streak, the Redmen also kept up with a less fortunate one. lvan Terzieff joined the injured ranks with Jim Gould and Dick Haavisto.

Tomorrow at 1 o'clock UMass' only undefeated team will travel to neighboring Amherst. This should be the best game of the year, since both teams are unde-feated.

Halfbacks Sam Lussier and Tom Delnickas were named by Coach Chuck Studley to start against the Boston University squad. Fullback John Gazourian will be in the starting lineup,

Both Delnickas and Gazourian have been sidelined for most of this season, Delnickas having suffered a separated shoulder, and Gazourian having

Sam Lussier, who has been the workhorse for the Redmen crew this year, has recently left the infirmary and will be helping both the ground and air attack of Coach Studley's crew.

Independent, Intensive Study Yields Responsible Students

A revised curriculum at Marl-boro College, with less emphasis on formal courses, and a new definition of concentration, was inaugurated with the present academic year, 1960-61, according to an announcement by Dean Roland W. Boyden.

The emphasis will be on results achieved according to the control of the co sults achieved, not means. In the future the B.A. and B.S. will be granted largely for the passing of a sophomore comprehen-sive examination, as now, and the submission of an acceptable senior project, instead of the amassing of credit hours and quality points as in the past. Meant to reveal the student's ability to do relatively independent work in depth, the project will normally be a short thesis as a climax of one or two years background work.

While preparing his project, a student will be placed under the direction of a member of the faculty and relieved of formal college requirements to take a fixed number of courses. Instead he will carry on his work as seems most fitting, through courses, se-minars, research in this country or abroad, and independent reading or laboratory work.

Campus Varieties Need E. List And C. Glenn Highlight UMass Concert Presentation

by BARBARA A KATZIFF '61

A joint concert by pianist Eu-gene List and violinist Carroll Glenn on Tuesday, November 1, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. will be the third offering of the 1960-61 University Concert

Eugene List began his piano career at the age of 16 by win-ning the Philadelphia Orchestra Youth Contest. He made his formal debut under the baton of Stokowski and aroused much attention during World War II when he played for Truman. Churchill, and Stalin at the Potsdam Conference. Since then, his radio and television appearances, his extensive world tours, including solo engagements with most of the major orchestras, and his "best-seller" recordings have made him one of the most renowned American concert pianists. During this appearance, he will play the area premiere per-formance of a 125-year-old Bach Sonata.

At the age of 11, Carroll Glenn (in private life Mrs. List), was the youngest student ever to be accepted by the Juilliard School. Since her New York debut, her annual tours have included many appearances as soloists with such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia Or-chestra, and the Chicago Sym-phony. The world over, her artistry has inspired critics to ac-claim her as "America's out-standing woman violinist." Her Finnegan stated that the Keys and Scrolls will also assist in the counting of ballots. He added that he was pleased with the quick response and cooperation received from the presidents of the groups, Edmund Hammond and Jean Bruen, respectively.

The election reports will be tabulated for both the student and faculty voting. In addition, Finnegan said, the faculty res-ponses will be tabulated to show breakdowns by departments.

The Political Science Association presents an opportunity for all students, regardless of voting eligibility, to express their preferences in the forthcoming national and state elections.

The Association also wishes to remind all University women at-tending the concert that they will be allowed one hour after it ends before they are due back at their dorms, so that they may attend

House Passes Bill Locating Medical School In Boston

The Massachusetts house passed on to the Senate Thurson to the Senate Thursday, the bill to establish a $17 million medical school in Boston, as a branch of UMass.

The bill was passed on a 137-52 roll call vote after a fight by Rep. Phillip K. Kimball (R-Springfield) to have the facility located in Western Massachu-setts. Intense debate has devel-oped over the location issue. Kim-ball and the Western Massachusetts representatives favored placing the school in Springfield, following the Hampden County Medical Society recommendation that a $5 million school be established there.

The Boston location is favored by the Massachusetts Medical Society. The UMass medical school will be a part of the Lem-uel Shattuck Chronic Disease Hospital.

Rep. Mary B. Newman (R. Cambridge) said the Boston bill would "ruin a great institution" because the Shattuck Hospital was a rehabilitation facility not a general hospital. She declared 'the school should be built in Springfield where the medical so ciety wants it'

DORM KEYS FOR SENIOR WOMEN

The Dean of Women's office would do well to examine the possibility of instituting a privilege plan for senior women such as the one recently inaugurated at the University of Kansas.

Under the Kansan system, senior girls with good grades and written permission from their parents can check out a dormitory key permitting them to come in after closing hours.

In addition to the idea of awarding privileges for students who have proven themselves to be responsible, the system is advantageous in that it would allow mature girls to attend some of the cultural entertainment offerings which are so abundant in the western Massachusetts area during the weekdays.

All colleges must have hours for women, but the rules should never be constructed so tightly as to prevent girls from enjoying additional educational programs offered in

Tribute To Learning

The University is not only growing physically but also developing intellectually. For a long time both students and faculty have been concerned about the academic atmosphere on this campus. Slowly but surely, this atmosphere is becoming enriched, and one of the main instruments of this change is the new Honors Program.

Until this year the Honors Program consisted new Honors Program.

Until this year the Honors Program consisted exclusively of independent research and study by Senior honors students, under the direction of departmental advisors, whose work culminated in the partmental advisors, whose work culminated in the writing of a thesis. The program was administered by the Honors Council, made up of about fifteen faculty members from all departments. The Council recommended that the University should have the resources of a faculty administrator who would be assigned to the area of Honors work and who would not only supervise the Senior Honors Program but also initiate other programs of honors work. On September 1, 1960, Dr. Louis Greenbaum in a memo-randum to the faculty, namely that "the philosophy of the honors idea has traditionally been dedicated the proposition that academic institutions leadership . . . our universities have the responsibility to identify and prepare the superior student for the tasks incumbent upon intellectually trained members of society . . In the purest sense, honors work is the pursuit of excellence."

The impact of this fine statement is enhanced by the action which has accompanied it. Besides the traditional Senior Departmental Honors program there are now Dean's Scholars from the Freshman and Sophomore classes; early admission students who have completed their Junior year in a secondary school and have met special requirements for entrance to the University; and other programs of acceleration and advanced or independent study.

Since the last column our government department has finally started to take action. Due to the pressure of late, several profs decided to have guest speakers in conjunction with their subjects in orcided to have guest speakers in conjunction with their subjects in order that the guest might answer students' questions. In one government course where they are studying Nazism the guest was Eva Braun. Nevertheless, the class was empty with the exception of one individual who strangely resembled the Dean of Women. But the Monday after the column, this prof comes into class and says, "Maybe I better say a word on cutting. You may be unaware of it but I've had a boy taking attendance in the back of the room for the whole semester so far. Right, Charlie? . . . Charlie? Perhaps the freshmen are not aware of it but Provost McCune (Hokkaido '05) made it a custom for many years to hold fireside chats in the Colonial lounge with students interested in conversation. While we always didn't take advantage of such an opportunity for cultural exchanges, the students certainly felt a sense of warmth and security as we passed by the lounge and saw Dr. McCune with his dog Falla beside him and a map of Hyde Park serving as a backdrop. And it was "a day of infamy" indeed when our image was smashed by his own utterances which noted that Columbus Day, Patriot's Day, Dinah Washington's birthday, and Memorial Day would no longer be holidays at UMass. Today when he passed the Union lobby you could hear whispers ". . . Benedict Arnold . . . Judas . . " depending upon one's fervor. On the other hand, there are still those from the old guard who continue to see him in his old image. Why it was just an hour or so after his cruel announcement that I saw him and inquired cordially, "And how was Yalta, Dr. McCune?"

But there was one ethnic group on campus who had been willing to make a deal with the Provost. They favored an exchange of Christmas and Easter for Columbus and Patriots' Days. But after many days of deliberation and consultation, Dr. McCune told AEPi that it

Most of you have probably seen or read this series of articles in the Collegian by Mike Palter entitled "The Bomb." The upperclassmen pass it off as Disneylandish but the reaction to the series had another down to the Little Store and started buying canned foods, plastic containers, sterilized water, Listerine, and a Batman comic book. There was also this football player on scholarship who almost panicked from fear. Since he didn't want his buddles to know how scared he he made up an excuse to call home ... "Gee, that's funny! My s haven't written to me for more money this week. Maybe I better

call Ma. . ."

I mentioned the Little Store before and it brought to mind an incident which occurred about a week ago. There was a fire beside the Little Store and with all the confusion and smoke, one, from a distance, could be induced to believe that the fire was in the Little Store itself. All of a sudden this kid comes running down the hill crying, "Did they save the Playboys?"

Should a bomb ever be dropped (as Palter suggests), I hope when instructions come for us we don't have to take them from any one of the four southern officers in the Armored ROTC department . . . since we probably won't be able to decipher what they're saying. All four of them have to have an interpreter in the room whenever they lecture, Still on the ROTC bit, in map reading the other day the instructor was showing us how to measure read distances on a map instructor was showing us how to measure road distances on a map. As a note of interest, he mentioned a gadget owned by one of the majors which resembles a watch on a stem and at the end of the stem is a tiny wheel. If you run the wheel along the road on the map, stem is a tiny wheel. If you run the wheel along the road on the map, the watch-like piece totals up the mileage for you.

This really bugged me till I just had to see it. So the next free class I had, I walked into the major's office. He had his back to the door and didn't see me enter. As I looked over his shoulder I saw he was using the gadget on a map...driving along with it... stopping at STOP streets ... giving hand signals .. slowing down in school areas.

WE WANT OUR RIGHTS!

To the Editor:

On reading your article in the October 24 edition of the Collegian concerning the abolition of holidays which fall in the middle of the week as classless days my roommate and I could not help wondering—Just what is the function of the Student Senate?

Through your reports on the Senate meetings we find that they do an adequate job of passing or vetoing orders for cameras, served thairs etc. but what do they accomplish that is PEALLY investigation.

chairs, etc., but what do they accomplish that is REALLY important?

We believe, and we are not alone in this opinion, that campus traditions such as Spring Day and these helidays (classless) are much more important to the attitude of the student body than legislation concerning trifles such as the above mentioned.

This step on the part of the administration is another on the road to causing greater student another on the road to causing greater student apathy on campus.

Is there no way the student body can protect themselves from the completely arbitrary role of the administration? The Student Senate seems inadequate.

Sincerely.

Two Angry Young Men

Dangerous Belief?

Bill walks into a classroom—let's say it's his Sociology class. He sits down, opens his notebook, and records the following: Man is not born human. He is taught to be human. We must exist in groups in order to be different from the animals, for all of our uniquely human characteristics are received from our social groups. The groups and the culture in which we exist determine our attitudes and es to another class. Here political differences are being discussed. He listens and then writes the following: Our political adherence is the result of the groups in which we have existed. We act with certain bias because of our group affiliation. If when certain bias because of our group affiliation. If we come to college from a conservative Republican background, we are (except for a few idiosyncratic individuals) mostly conservative Republicans. If in college we are exposed solely to liberal Democratic professors, we become liberal Democrats. If after college we are again subjected to a conservative college we are again subjected to a conservation. Republican environment, we again become conservative Republicans.

Next Sociology class-Bill is told that there are wrong in one society is morally right in another. What is good or true or beautiful in one culture is not good or true or beautiful in another. Standards of truth, beauty, goodness, etc., are completely relative.

How does our UMass student react to these ideas? Without giving them a proper amount of thought he may begin to see himself as a mere instrument of a society whose values are arbitrar and relative. He may feel that his beliefs and be havior are merely the result of the cultural condi-tioning to which he has been subjected since birth. Then he looks at the culture which has conditioned him. Its content appears to be arbitrarily determined. The ideas, values and standards of his culture are true only within a certain narrow framework—that is, they lack world-wide validity.

Now without first considering how true all these ideas are, let us consider their effect. Do they allow us to think of ourselves as active, creative persons with a considerable amount of free will or do they cause us to feel like the passive victims of forces beyond our control? How about our ideas, our standards, and our goals? How highly do we value these and how strongly do we hold them when we believe that we have been completely conditioned to them and when we believe that their worth is completely relative to the time, the place, and the circum-

Most important of all, how do such ideas influence our actions as individuals in society? Action usually results from a firm belief in something—that is if the action is creative. Do these ideas encourage firm belief? Do these ideas create or sustain the ideals and values which form the basis for useful action, or do they tend to weaken or destroy values and leave the individual confused, undirected, and, worst of all, passive?

These are questions which can occur in conr These are questions which can occur in connection with the ideas about individual free will and cultural relativity which I have described above. They all lead to one overwhelming question—Can such beliefs become dangerous by weakening the individual and his society as a whole? If they can become dangerous and destructive, what should we do?

I for one believe that we should begin by thoroughly questioning their validity and the extent of their application. We must search honestly for the limits to such beliefs in relativity and determining limits to such beliefs in relativity and determin-ism and not let these ideas assume more force and influence than their truthfulness justifies. After all, relativity and determinism, like all other definite forms of beliefs, are fallable and limited. We should be made fully aware of this and not let ourselves be easily convinced by these ideas and their propon ents as many appear to have been already.

THE PARTY WEEKEND: ITS CAUSE AND CURE

With the season of party weekends almost upon us, my mail of late has been flooded with queries from young immates of women's colleges wishing to know how one conducts one's self when one has invited a young gentleman for a weekend, so let us today take up this burning issue.

Well, my dear girls, the first thing to remember is that your young gentleman is far from home and frightened. Put him at his ease. You might, for instance, surprise him by having his mother sitting in a rocker on the station platform when he gets off the train.

Next, what kind of corsage should you send your young gentle-Next, what kind of corsage should you send your young genue-man? Well, my beloved maidens, orchids are always acceptable. So, indeed, are phlox and delphinium. In fact, most any flora will serve. Do try, however, to avoid carnivorous plants. If you find, my esteemed fillies, that your local florist has run out of stock, do not be dismayed. Make a corsage out of paper. But pick good, stiff, durable paper—twenty dollar bills, for example.

Remember at all times, my fond wenches, to show your young gentleman courtesy and consideration. Open doors for him, walk on the traffic side of the path, assist him to the punch bowl, zip his parka, light his Marlboros. (What, you ask, if he doesn't smoke Marlboros? Ridiculous, my precious nymphs! Of course, he smokes Marlboros! Don't you? Don't 1? Doesn't everybody who knows a hawk from a handsaw? What other cigarette gives you such a lot to like? Such easy-drawing filtration? Such unfiltered taste? Such soft pack or flip-top box? No other, my sweet minxes, no other. Marlboro stands alone, and any man worthy of you, my estimable damsels, is bound to be a Marlboro man.)

If you will follow the simple instructions stated above, my good lasses, you will find that you have turned your young gentleman into a fast and fervent admirer. There is nothing quite like a party weekend to promote romance. I am in mind of a party weekend some years ago at Miss Pomfritt's Seminary for well-born females in West Linotype, Ohio. Serafina Sigafoos, a sophomore at this institution, majoring in napkin folding, sent an invitation to a young man named Fafnir Valve, a junior at the Joyce Kilmer School of Forestry, majoring in sap and boles. Serafina had been ape for Fafnir since high school, but Fafnir preferred a girl named Gelia Fleshwound, the high school drum majorette who once threw a baton so high she impaled a southmajorette who once threw a baton so high she impaled a southbound mallard.

Anyhow, Serafina sent an invitation to Fafnir, and he came, and she showered him with kindness and cuff links, and then he went away, and Serafina sat anxiously by the mailbox, wondering whether she would ever hear from him again. Sure enough, two weeks later she got a letter: "Dear Serafina, Can you let me have fifty bucks? Yours, Fafnir."

Whimpering with eestasy, she ran to the bank and withdrew the money and mailed it to him. From then on, she got the same request every week, and as a result, she became very well acquainted with Ralph T. Involute, teller of the West Linotype Bank and Trust Co., and their friendship ripened into love, and today they are happily married and live in Stamen, Oregon, where Ralph is in the extruded molasses game and Serafina is a hydrant.

Every weekend is a party weekend with Marlboros—or Marl-boro's unfiltered companion cigarette—mild, flavorful Philip Morris. Try the newest Philip Morris—the sensational king-size Commander. Have a Commander—welcome aboard!

The meeting continued with the writing of a constitution for R.S.O. and the election of officers. Two Amherst College boys Rick Leahy and Andy Leader were elected president and vice-president respectively. Buffy Sainte-Marie '62 retained the office of Secretary which she held last spring. The singers concluded the business meeting with the changing of the name of the Society from Amherst to Pioneer Valley The meeting continued with the from Amherst to Pioneer Valley Folk Lore Society. The new name better describes the group for it is a four college effort with mem-bership open to students, faculty, and any one interested in nativ or foreign folk lore.

As the meeting ended, humming and the tuning of guitars and banjos mushroomed into hours of musical enjoyment. Students from Amherst, Smith and UMass sang such songs as 'Michael, Row the Boat Ashore", "Children, Go Where I Send Thee", and the humorous Labor Union songs. Herman's solo of "Black is the Colour" introduced Buffy's "Annonais". Accompaniment for the four guitars and two banjos was supplied for appropriate songs by Bill Keith, an Amherst senior, on his autoharp. Miss Sainte-Marie has extended an invitation to anyone in-terested in Folk Lore who desires nembership to contact her at Knowlton House.

Fumbles Prove Fatal As Redmen Bow To B.U., 20-7

UMass Offensive Clumsy, Loses Three Bobbles; Defense Sparkles by W. JOHN LENNON '61

/ Massachusetts played the role of the perfect and the role of the perfect guest Saturday when they helped BU celebrate Homecoming before 12,500 elated fans, The spectators saw Dick Desmarias and a fumbling Red-men eleven combine to spell a 20-7 Terrier victory.

ם ר ר

Desmarias, a 5-10 package of dynamite, enjoyed the greatest day of his career as he piled up 146 yards in 30 carries, and romped into the endzone with romped into the endzone w the Terriers' final touchdown.

BU CHOSES WIND

Coach Steve Sinko's boys got the jump on the Redmen in much the same way as UMass took the same way as UMass took advantage of Harvard a month ago. The Scarlet won the toss and chose to play with the 20 mph wind at their backs.

This strategy paid handsome dividends and led to the game's initial score. After the Redmen ground attack was stymied, Jack Conway's punt failed to buck the stiff breeze, and carried only 18 yards. Jack Farland returned the pigskin to the UM 38, and six plays later Paul Johnson took a pitchout and scampered the re maining five yards to the end-zone. Farland's conversion was on the mark, and the Redmen were on the tailend of a 7-0

FUMBLE HURTS

The Redmen made a gallant bid to knot the score on the ensuing kickoff. Starting from their own 22, the UM warriors marched 72 yards. Then Jack Conway, who had quarterbacked the drive, fumbled on a third and two situation and the Terriers re-covered on their own six.

The hungry Boston University gridders capitalized on another Redmen mistake early in the second period. Farland picked off a UMass aerial and returned to his own 45. From there Desmarias ground out most of the yardage and Jim Luker finally lunged over with seven minutes remaining in the half.

The Redskins from the Pelham hills finally reached paydirt in the waning minutes of the initial half. The scoring jaunt, which originated at midfield, carried to the 19 when interference was ruled on a McCormick to Harrington pass attempt. Co-captain Tom Delnickas, starting his first game of the campaign, carried for a first down on the eight. Then he and Sam Lussier combined their their telescope. pigskin to the two. From there Lussier cracked his way over the line on a fourth down play. Dependable John Bamberry toed the extra point, and the Redmen were back in the fight, 13-7.

MASS. DEFENSE O.K.

The Mass. defense sparkled in the third and early fourth quar-ters when it repulsed three Ter-rier drives deep in Redmen territory. Twice, when BU's scoring ambitions were thwarted, the Terriers attempted the three pointer. Both, however, were wasted effort.

The final scoring occured when the final scoring occurred when the Redmen again gave the op-position possession, this time on the 20. The Redmen line just couldn't keep up with the offen-sive errors, and on the fourth play Desmarias raced around the play Desmarias raced around the UM left side from six yards out. Farland's kick split the uprights and the final count read, 20-7.

The Redmen staged one last desperate bid, driving to the enemy 15 where a holding penalty completely thwarted any visions of their second upset of the season on the banks of the Charles.

TERRIER TIDBITS

A victory would have greatly boosted the mounting Massachu-setts prestige, but the big game is yet to come. The Redmen can still take all the marbles by winning the elusive Yankee Conference crown. This is a distinct possibility; we only need to up-end UNH here in two weeks, and hope that URI dumps the perennial kings, UConn... BU guard, John Meschino of Cranston, R. Balch Tops All Records As UMass Harriers Win YanCon Tourney At URI

by DICK QUINN '63

Last Saturday at Kingston, R. I., sensational Dave Balch, the Crown Prince of the YanCon cross-country league, broke all existing course records as he ran Massachusetts to the conference championship. Besides leading his team to victory, Davy settled some personal accounts by beat-ing Doug MacGregor (N.H.), Al Cross (C) and Mike Kimball (Me.) The latter two are the only runners in the entire conference to beat Balch.

UMass (43) outran Connecticut (48), New Hampshire (76), R.I. (85), Maine (102) and Vermont (123) in that order and by the respective scores. Balch broke the R.I. 5.4 mile course record by 29 seconds as he finished first in 23 minutes, 22 seconds, Ralph Buschmann, senior co-capt., grabbed third for the Redmen in 23 minutes, 56 seconds. Dick Blomstrom took sixth place in 24 minutes, 20 seconds. After Blom-strom, Mass got its final two scores in as Kenny O'Brien scores in as Kenny O'Brien grabbed the 13th spot in 24 minutes, 46 seconds and "Emo" Barron, the other co-capt., snatched the 20th spot in 25 minutes 11 seconds.

UCONN PLACES SECOND

Conn. finished second with a score of 48 as Al Cross, who just weeks ago beat both Balch and Buschmann on the Mass. course, finished in fourth place behind both of them with an official time of 24 mins. 9 seconds. Conn's second scorer was Dick Kosinski, who ran a good race by finishing in fifth place, just behind teammate Cross. Kosinski had a time of 24 mins. 17 secs. Bob Bryce, with 24 mins. 30 secs. and Dick Seale, with 24 mins. 30 secs. took 8th and 9th places, and at this early point in the race Conn., with four of its five coring men already in, a cinch to win the meet. But they watched twelve enemy runners finish before Richie Sherman took the 22nd position in 25 mins. 11

N.H. finished 3rd with 76 points N.H. Innished 3rd with 76 points as Doug McGregor, who won the Conn. meet as a sophomore in 1958, and finished 2nd last year, repeated his effort as he again took 2nd place in a fast 23 mins. 42 secs. N.H.'s 2nd man was Ed Pelzar in 14th place with a time of 24 mins. 56 secs.

URl obviously was not aided by the home course advantage as they finished 4th with 85 points. Their best man was Bob Lund in 7th place with a 24 mins., 24

MAINE A SURPRISE

MAINE A SURPRISE
The mystery of the race was Maine's fifth place finish and 102 point total. The league's two defending champs, Maine and its ace harrier, Mick Kimball, "lost their stuff" as Kimball could do no better than 15th place. Maine's first finisher was Benny Heinnick first finisher was Benny Heinnick in 10th place and with a time of 24 mins. 40 secs. Next was Kimball in 15th with 25 mins. even.

The mountaineers from Vermont took the dunce with a score of 123 points. Bill Stilson came in $2th in 24 mins., 44 secs. The next Vermont marathoner was Timmy Simpson in 23rd position.

GOOD UMASS DEPTH

A post-meet analysis might now just why the Footrickmen won. Balch needed no introduction as he proved himself to be one of the best runners in the East-and he still has two more years to improve. Buschmann ran very well, as he always does in "big ones". Blomstrom and rien, two more sophomores the 'Brien, got their first taste of stern competition and rose to meet casion. Barron ran his usual steady race, which was good enough to help the Mass. cause. Bob Avery and Charlie Proctor didn't figure in the Mass. scoring, but ran well enough to prevent a lower score by some of the other teams.

The champs will run against Springfield College this Wednesday on the home cours

UNH Upsets UConn; YanCon In Triple Tie

Things were happening up at Durham, New Hampshire last Saturday as the Wildcats upset the league leading UConn Hus-kies, 17-9. That was the first U-Conn loss in Yankee Conference play in five years.

UConn's running attack looked sluggish throughout the game and suffered a major setback when co-captain Bill Minnerly was forced out of action in the first half with a sprained ankle.

The upset put UMass, UNH and UConn in a three way tie for the YanCon crown, giving the Redmen their best chance for the top honors in many a year.

Coach Studley and crew will take on the Wildcats at Alumni field November 12. They'll have to keep their eyes on Bo Dickson, the UNH quarterback who completed 9 out of his 13 passes for a total of 132 yards. Another man to watch will be Dick Mazquita who carried for 81 yards in 10

If the Massmen can defeat New Hampshire, and if the Rhode Island Rams can somehow take the UConn squad, the bean-pot will go to UMass. Those are two big if's, but they can come

Plans Look to Fair

NEW YORK (UPI) - Construction of a new terminal build-ing at New York's LaGuardia Airport has been put ahead 18 months to permit its completion for the opening of the 1964 World's Fair.

The Port of New York Authority had originally planned to complete the center section of the $30 million passenger terminal in 1965. It is now expected to be ready for visitors to the projected fair, just a five-minute ride from the airport.

Frosh Booters Lose First Game To Jeff Rookies

The crash of the undefeated ended in a crunch for the UMass frosh soccer team Saturday, as they lost to Amherst, 9-2.

The score shows precisely the complexion of the game. After Amherst scored in the opening minute, UMass seemed to lose all spirit. They were unorganized and looked like a high school team against the skillful American against the skillful America team against the skillful Am-herst machine.

Next Friday the Frosh will try to bounce back into the winning column when they play their final game at Tufts.

Freedom Suppressed News Staff Resigns

Members of the Paily Califor-nian editorial board were joined by the editor of the neighboring San Francisco Foghorn recently as the battle between the University of California student government and campus newspaper entered its seventh day.

Richard Harcourt, Editor of the University of San Francisco Foghorn, left his paper after the administration refused to allow him to offer Foghorn facilities to Berkeley students working on the Independent Californian, paper being published by former Daily Californian staff members who resigned when the Executive Committee (ExCom) of the Associated Students moved to impose controls on the paper's editorial freedom.

The first two issues of the Independent Californian, being published on a daily basis, have sold 5,000 copies priced at 10r and 5¢ respectively. Additional income for the new paper has come from fund raising rallies which has brought in $800 to date.

ExCom has revised by-laws 1, 3 and 4 of the Daily Californian constitution, giving the student government responsibility for the executive decisions and editorial policies. Such decisions were formerly made by the paper's editorial board.

Also included in the revision is a new section requesting that the paper give adequate publicity to ASUC functions.

The Berkeley is divided over the issue, with the student honor society and dormitory women backing the former daily staffers and the Associated Women Stu-dents siding with ExCom.

The matter was brought to the attention of the National Student Association (NSA) which sent a telegram to ExCom supporting the paper's staff and declaring that "the student press must be completely self directed" and "must be permitted to function free of all student or non-student administrative devices."

In a long distance telephone conversation Tuesday night, ASUC President George Link told NSA he believed ExCom had the right to control Daily California fornian policy since student funds support the paper thus making ExCom its publisher.

For the past week the Daily Californian has been put out by an ASUC recruited staff headed by the university's director of publications

by JOHN HOLDEN '62

Collegian Staff Reporter An Amherst poet, Robert Fran-is, led a discussion of "Freedom and the Poet" with the Literary Society Wednesday evening. The poet seated himself before the audience in order to encourage a lively debate between the members of the audience on the subject of "how much freedom should a poet be allowed in his writings"

Francis began his discussion with an anecdote about a lady who asked him whether it would proper to include the pro-ins "I, my and mine" in a lyric poem. He was tempted to tell the lady, "I think, 'we, our, and ours' should not be included in a lyric poem as well as nouns and verbs". The poet pointed out that poetry is not a polite game with rules, but an art with ex-tensive freedom,

Poet Not "Special"

Discussion among the audience revealed various limitations which society imposes and bad poets. Ezra Pound was and odd poets. E2ra Found was mentioned as an example of a writer using extensive freedom in the poetic art, Our own gov-ernment does not impose any rules as to the from that a poet may use. He may write in free verse, sonnets, or any other verse form. But on the question of con-tent, the poet as well as other writers are subject to the laws of reason, libel and obscenity. Francis stated his belief that "the poet is not a special person."

He pointed out that form and content should not be violently separated, but sound structure should reinforce the meaning of the poem. He said that the poet approaches his subject with free-dom, but his poetic discipline li-his freedom as he writes.

Emphesizes Self-Expression Someone asked Francis whether the poet should write for his poetic concept to his readers. Francis said he wrote to communicate to several readers at least. But he emphasized that self-expression and communica-tion ought to be united in the poem "Let the poem fulfill it-self", the poet said.

Another member of the au-dience asked if inspiration was useful to a poet. The poet said, "Inspiration is not a word in my vocabulary". Much work and discipline is involved in creating a poem, he said.

The topic shifted to the question of "what are the trends in American poetry?" Francis suggested more poems dealing with scientific concepts as well as satirical poems ought to be produced. He ended with a quotation from W. H. Auden, criticizing the trend in America toward an organized poetic society which produces a "national poetry."

Single Vote Alters Outcome Of Elections

If you're tempted to stay away from the polls Nov. 8, on the the-ory that "one vote won't matter," you might ponder these facts of history:

One vote in Congress saved

One Vote in Congress saved Selective Service just 12 weeks before Pearl Harbor. California, Idaho, Texas, Ore-gon and Washington became states by the margin of a single vote in Congress, Rutherford B.

Hayes elected President in 1876 by a majority of one electoral vote.

In 1884, James G. Blaine lost New York State — and with it the presidency of the United States - to Grover Cleveland by less than one vote per precinct.

Woodrow Wilson became President in 1916 by carrying California with less than one vote

A shift of one vote in each precinct would have changed the outcome of Michigan's guberna-torial race in 1950, and of the 4964 Senate contests in New Jersey and Ohio.

Your vote may be the crucial one in your precinct. It could elect a congressman . . . a governor . . . a senator . . . or even a president.

Haas, Socialist Candidate Condemns Capitalist Society

by LARRY RAYNER '61 Editor-In-Chief

Eric Haas, Socialist-Labor nominee for president, denounced the capitalist system as certain to lead to the annihilation of the world, Thursday night, before a capacity crowd in the S.U. Council Chambers.

Haas told the crowd that his party is running on platform of putting all government in the hands of the workers, saying that all government should be along economic interests, rather than the "outmoded demarcations of government" now in existence.

Under the system, he proposed, all workers would be unionized and each union, such as a teachers union, would be represented in the supreme ruling body of the nation. He made it clear, however, that nearly all decisions would be made by the unions at the grass roots level. As an example, he said all decisions concerning education would be made by the teachers union. Hnas said that there would no longer be overproduction, because officials would determine how much was needed beforehand.

Haas maintained that this system would completely wipe out the economic oppression to which the majority are now subjected, since the governing of-ficials would be elected by fellow workers, who would select per-sons who could best represent their interests.

He said that this system would bring the wage level up to a point where there would be plenty for all, since the profits now taken by capitalists would be distri-buted among the workers. He cited the system as the "most perfect democracy" since all power would be in the hands of the people.

Denouncing capitalism as the cause of wars, he said today's working class receives a smaller proportionate share than any other class. Capitalism only gives the worker a living wage, not a fair return, he said.

Before this system would come abcut, he admitted, workers must take possession of industry to back up their action at the polls. The revolution would be along legal lines of the Fifth Amend-ment of the Constitution. He felt that the ruling capitalist class would fight the change vehemently, since they would be un-willing to "work for a living."

He said that a Utopian system once it got started, would spread all over the world rapidly.

He held that man is basically a cooperative, not competitive, creature, and once need was eliminated, greed would soon disappear.

In his attack on the capitalist system, he cited the fact that most industries were operating way below capacity. Taking steel as an example, he pointed out that the industry was operating at only 55% of capacity even though the automobile production is at its high point.

Haas was introduced by John Finnegan, president of the sp soring Political Science Assn.

THE STATE OF THE UNIVERSITY:

Robertson Deplores Legislative Controls

by RICHARD HAYNES '64
Collegian Staff Reporter
James M. Robertson, a resident of Southbridge, Mass., is president of the Massachusetts Secondary School Principals' Association and principal of Mary E. Wells High School. He is also chairman of the Mass. Secondary School Evaluation Commission.

He received his B.S. and Ed.M. from Boston University, his doctorate of education from Calvin Coolidge College and has done graduate work at Hurvard uate work at Harvard.

When asked if he felt UMass was becoming a 'diploma mill', Robertson replied that he had heard that statement many times. "However," he continued, "I shall reserve my judgment until I am personally invited by the administration to observe their professors, the size of classes, and the type of instruction offered. I realize that this is an innovation because, although many colleges like to observe and criticize high schools, few colleges give a reciprocal right to the secondary schools." He further explained that before he made any statement on the 'diploma mill' issue he would like to be assured that only on the 'diploma mill' issue, he would like to be assured that only outstanding professors are department heads and that all the professors teach and correct their assignments themselves and do not resort to graduate and undergraduate correctors.

Robertson, concerned over the recent resignation of ex-president Mather, three deans, several department heads, and others, said, "When deducators of the caliber of ex-president Mather leave, something, to quote Shakespeare, 'Is rotten in the state of Denmark', or shall we say, Massachusetts?"

UMass, he explained, cannot expect to give its students outstanding education if the faculty turnover rate is high. "A beginning instructor is still learning to teach during his first five years of instruction. If he leaves after this apprenticeship, the students must suffer through another apprenticeship period."

Robertson remarked that obviously the students themselves must be dissatisfied with this and other existing conditions at UMass. "Otherwise this 'State of the University' survey would not be conducted."

Robertson asserted that "both the administration and the legislature must cooperate to achieve this aim. If this cooperation is not achieved, the endowed colleges will continue to attract the best minds of the Commonwealth."

The high point of UMass, he felt, was that education is being supplied to a mass at a reasonable cost to the individual. "The University, however, has a long way to go to meet the educational standards of mid-western colleges."

This was the premise broached by Walter G. O'Donnell, professor of management at the University of Massachusetts, at a recent meeting in New York of the Institute of Massachusetts. stitute of Management Sciences, an international scientific society composed of nearly 3000 special-

Speaking on "Values and Value Judgments in Managerial Decisions," O'Donnell maintained that "value systems as well as pre-dictive systems, purpose as well as mechanism, require continual concern and systematic study" by those engaged in making cor-porate decisions.

The Massachusetts educator's remarks led to the establishment of a College of Management Philosophy at the conclusion of the Institute's New York meeting. The Institute is composed of several "colleges" engaged in fostering research and communicating scientific findings in various fields related to the management of corporate organizations

The new college will conduct research in certain branches of philosophy and the philosophy of science in order to bring knowledge in these areas to bear on the management of business organ-izations. Faculty Protest -Petition For Pauling

The U.S. Senate investigation of Dr. Linus Pauling, 'out-spoken' scientist, has attracted world-wide attention and has, more important, been influential in altering-for the worse-foreign opinion of the United States. Dr. Pauling was brought before the subcommittee for initiating a 1958 petition to the United Nations that called for an end to nuclear weapons testing and for his refusal to disclose the names of scientists connected with this petition. It is certainly significant to note the attitude and reaction of the faculties of the colleges and universities in our

The reaction came in the form of another petition, originating at Rutgers Law School. Opposed to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee investigation of Dr. Pauling, it has been circulating among faculty members of the various Connecticut Valley campuses. This same petition is now going the rounds of several departments here at the University. Although the Senate committee has temporarily dropped the matter, the petitioners believe that "the weight of opinion should continue to pile up."

Realizing the importance and immediacy in facing realistically the problem created by nuclear bombs and arguing for the rights of each citizen as guaranteed by the Constitution, this petition confronts an issue of national concern. It is opposed to the suppression of "opinions based on special knowledge."; it is fighting to uphold the principle of freedom of speech.

More explicitly, the petition makes this statement about the case of Dr. Pauling:

"The issue of whether nuclear bomb testing should be continued is one of the most urgent facing the world today. The democratic process requires that every citizen have the right to express himself freely on this issue and to urge others to do so. Any unnecessary harassment by government authority accomplished through implicit insinuation that those who urge the world powers to discontinue nuclear bomb testing are conspirators against United States security tends to remove this issue as a subject of public debate and thus interferes with the freedom of speech of citizens of the United States. In Dr. Pauling's case, the investigation tends to deprive him not only of his freedom of speech as a citizen but also of his academic freedom as a professor to express, in public, opinions based on special knowledge within the area of his com-

Profiles In Courage

by MICHAEL PALTER '63

To the independent voter, there must be great frustration in watching the vociferous Nixon and Kennedy supporters proudly displaying their brightly colored buttons and staunchly asserting the superiority of their respective candidates. The independent and the liberal are frustrated perhaps because they have no definite choice.

Yet this can not tell the whole story, since the independent or liberal is still entitled to vote for one or the other.

The difficulty is in the candidates. It seems that with the exception of Mr. Lodge, the respective parties have picked the weakest possible candidates. Before the Nixon and Kennedy supporters jump on my back, I should hasten to submit my reasoning on this matter.

Far be it from any of us to deny the personal charm and magnetism of either candidate. Each displays the sharp image of a leade of men, a champion of freedom, etc., etc. And let us not say that this is not important. Indeed, the personality of each man appears to be his major resource. Of course, there are drawbacks to his also. Indeed, each camp has a story about the other. The Nixon supporters tell of a conversation between Joseph Kennedy and Jack. Joseph asks, "Say, son, what would you like to be?" to which Jack replies, "President, Dad." "I mean when you grow up," retorts Joseph.

To be fair to all concerned, let me tell you of the Kennedy-camp rebuttal. The Kennedy-supporter merely shows a photograph of Dick Nixon bearing the caption, "Would you buy a used car from this

There is no doubt, however, that each camp has a powerful weapon in the past records of the candidates. While the Nixon supporters query as to Kennedy's whereabouts during numerous roll-calls, the Kennedy supporters remind them that Nixon has protected himself on various occasions by taking opposing stands on similar legislation.

Significantly enough, however, important situations such as these fall before the gleaming eyes of Dick and the enchanting hair of Jack. Indeed, I have constantly queried Nixon or Kennedy supporters on such important questions as McCarthy-ism and foreign aid. The reaction is either a blank stare, a question in rebuttal, or a digression upon the rising or falling prestige of the United States.

However, the vivacious personalities of the candidates cannot overcome certain stifling disadvantages. It is clear that Kennedy's selection of Mr. Johnson as his running-mate constituted the subordination of political morality to political expediency. Although we must admit that Mr. Johnson is a relatively clean (by Northern political standards) Southerner, one is included to doubt that a pure apple exists within a putrid barrel. Indeed, what makes things worse is the fact that Kennedy needs a Southerner to counteract the forces of anti-Catholicism in the South. At this moment, however, it seems that Mr. Johnson will not suffice to stem the tide.

Mr. Nixon has the great problem of associating himself with the favorable aspects of the Eisenhower administration while isolating himself from the unfavorable results. We must also remember that Eisenhower, although a quiet and unassuming President, completely overshadowed Nixon in the public eye. Indeed, it seemed that every time that Nixon got the chance to produce a successful image, he ended up second best in a kitchen, or with a suit stained by raw eggs and tomatoes (as in Latin America.) Of course, one must sympathize with the Republican conventioneers who selected Nixon. Indeed, whom else could they have selected? Hadn't Nixon been "around" for eight years? Nixon was certainly the "available" man!

Lodge, it seems, has conveyed the most successful image to the American people. Indeed, was not Lodge the "valiant and noble fighter for peace and the essential dignity of mankind?" Aloof from partisan politics, Cabot had the United Nations at his disposal to disseminate his dignified and statesman-like image. In his tenure as U. S. delegate, did not Henry display a fantastic mental fluency in international affairs? Was it not he who spoke to the Russians many more times than Eisenhower or Nixon or Kennedy? In fact, it would not be an exaggeration to say that the most effective Republican ticket could well have been Lodge and Nixon, not Nixon and Lodge. Indeed, I have spoken to many Kennedy supporters who are frustrated because of their preference for Lodge over Johnson.

A further manifestation of the political weakness of the candidates is shown by the negative manner in which a great many Americans will cast their votes. Indeed, they are voting not for Kennedy, but against Nixon. Of course, the converse is also true, significantly in parts of the South

Yet is it not a marvelous sight to see the two gallant warriors mounted on Madison Avenue chargers careening over the asphalt to the stables on Pennsylvania Avenue?

And in his humble abode, we see the independent writing the names "Nixon" and "Kennedy" on a sheet of hard, white cardboard , selecting a sharp and well-feathered dart . . . and carefully blindfolding himself. Such are the complex mechanisms of a political cam-

An important aspect of the recognition of superior students is that Dr. Greenbaum and his associates keep in contact with approximately 500 students of Honors standing from all classes, for whom dents of Honors standing from all classes, for whom no Honors Program has as yet been initiated, through the publication of a periodical newsletter which lists important cultural events of the four Valley colleges worthy of their interest and particularly colleges.

Valley colleges worthy of their interest and participation. Dr. Greenbaum is as good as his word.
One of the most fascinating developments of the Honors Program is the experimental Sophomore Colloquia, There are four colloquia, interdisciplinary in nature, oriented around humanities, social sciences, and natural-physical sciences. The subject matter for these groups consists of four broad topics: the problem of the tragic from the Greeks to the present; the evolution and nature of social groups and institutions; theoretical biology in the age of the New Physics; and a broad study of man. age of the New Physics; and a broad study of man, his problems, and his world in the twentieth century. his problems, and his world in the twentieth century. Each group has ten students and two professors, making a student-faculty ratio of five to one. The eight professors are men from many different spheres of thought: Professors Hans Duus, Chemical Engineering; Eugene Putala, Botany; Howard Quint, History, Vincent Rogers, Education; T. O. Wilkinson, Sociology; Dean Himy Kirshen, Business Adminisration; Professor Leonard Ehrlich, Philosophy; and University Professor Leonard Ehrlich, Philosophy; and University Professor Max Goldberg. All are extremely capable and learned men, and all have the same desire as that of Dr. Greenbaum—to give the superior student the opportunity to develop his intellectual faculties and values to their fullest capacity. This is a prodigious task, but one which the professors as well as the students will meet squarely.

This is only the beginning. For the present these

This is only the beginning. For the present, there are not available sufficient facilities to conduct Honors Programs for the Freshman and Junior classes, but it is hoped that they will be provided classes, but it is hoped that they will be provided for as soon as the problems of the experimental colloquia can be worked out. Plans are already in the offing for a Junior Honors Colloquium. However, these programs cannot succeed unless the entire student body is aware of them and will take full advantage of them. This is the answer to intellectual apathy, that condition which students in the past have inveiced against and have looked at past have inveighed against and have looked at with horror. There is no reason for that condition

The main philosophy of the colloquium was also stated in Dr. Greenbaum's memorandum. The first touchdown was made on a Connelly to Fallon pass, the conversion on a run by the quarterback. The final tally was when Kevin Judge caught a bullet pass from Ed Connelly. Final score: SAE 27, AEPi 6.

TEP BLANKS PMD

In another game a strong TEP team shut out PMD 6-0. The first half was scoreless, and although the Teppers drove hard, they did not manage to score. PMD's single threat came in this half, only to be stopped on the three yard line for four con-secutive plays.

RASON TEPS BIG GUN

Although TEP dominated the second half they managed to score only once. Jerry Rason, after throwing three successful passes to center Sol Yas, ran off tackle for the score. Final score: TEP 6, PMD 0.

Two pictures, scheduled to appear in the campus humor magazine, Ya-Hoo, will not appear in this issue, according to coeditors Wesley Honey '62 and Tracy B. Wilson '62.

The full-page cartoons, which showed Rev. Norman Vincent Peale wearing a Nixon for Presi-Vincent dent button and Pope John XXIII wearing a Kennedy for Presi-dent button, were dropped by the editors after consultation with Pres. John W. Lederle and a resolution from the Executive Committee of the Student Senate urged them to reconsider on the mittee grounds that the action might be detrimental to the University.

The dispute arose last Monday after the Catholic Chaplain, Father David Power, told the Secretary of the University, John Gillespie, that the pictures would appear, when the magazine came out this Monday.

The administration went into onsultation Tuesday afternoon with the editors, but the editors still refused to remove the pictures voluntarily.

The editors finally did agree to the removal under protest when it was clear that President Ledrele was not going to allow the pictures to appear.

Collegian And WMUA To Cover Election Results

WMUA and the Collegian will both offer students here unprecedented coverage of the natio election returns next week. WM-UA officials have announced the student station will remain on the air throughout the evening of Nov. 8 to bring the full returns as soon as available. Assisting in the WMUA coverage will be Sen. Ralph Flanders who will offer commentary on the results as they are received.

The Collegian will provide full election returns in its Wednesday issue, which will be available to the students in the morning instead of at its usual afternoon publication hour. The editors have expressed intentions of having the issue in the Student Union by 9 a.m. Wednesday morning. The Collegian will be able to date coverage than most city editions available on campus. Many students were dissatisfied with the city papers at primary time because the editions on sale here had gone to press too early to offer conclusive returns.

The Collegian edition will be made possible by the coordinated effort of the paper's news department, using the WMUA teletype facilities and the way. facilities, and the special efforts of the Collegian's printer, Hamilton Newell of Amherst.

The special Collegian will go to press around 3 a.m. Wednesday morning. Copies will be delivered to the dormitories in the morning, but all students are encouraged to pick up copies, in the S.U. lobby, where several thousand will be available.

Voters using absentee ballots, throng the Collegian office to receive notary seal. Over 300 have voted to date.

Ya-Hoo Censorship Sparks Controversy

The Administration's censorship of the campus humor magazine has become a major controversy because of a number of very complicated factors. It was complicated even further by the sloppy handling of the problem on the part of the administration

The first question is: "Should the editors have run a picture of Rev. Norman Vincent Peale wearing a Nixon Button and Pope John XXIII wearing a Kennedy Button?"

Without considering the fact that some might think this in bad taste, we would say no because both pictures are libelous.

Then there is the question of whether Father David Power, the Catholic chaplain, should have gone to the administration when he found out about the two pictures, saying these pictures were derogatory to the Catholic religion. On these grounds, he really had no business trying to censor Ya-Hoo, especially at a state university.

But he did tell John Gillespie, secretary to the University, about the pictures. Knowing these pictures might easily stir a controversy in the State Legislature, he went to President Lederle and recommended that the publication be held up until the editors could be consulted. Lederle rightfully agreed to this.

However, it took more than 24 hours for the administration to get hold of the editors, and they decided in the meantime that regardless of what the editors said, the pictures were not going to appear.

This was a grave error. It became an official act of censorship at this point and became subject to report in the newspapers.

The real unfortunate thing about this act is that it probably was unnecessary. If the Ya-Hoo editors were made aware of the grave repercussions this would have made in the legislature, it would have been reasonable to think that they would have voluntarily withdrawn the pictures.

The administration made another mistake when they put forth the argument that these pictures should also be withheld because of the large body of Catholics in the state. We support the Ya-Hoo contention that the magazine should not be designed to offend as few as possible. If the editors agreed to offend no minority groups, there wouldn't be any magazine.

Of course we oppose censorship in any form, but we are convinced that President Lederle has no intention of carrying out such

Ya-Hoo Speaks Up

To the Editor:

In view of the rumours that have arisen out of the episode concerning two pictures that were to be run in YA-HOO, the editors of that magazine would like to make clear their position.

After realizing the position that the printing of a picture of Mr. Norman Vincent Peale wearing a Nixon button and a picture of Pope John XXIII wearing a Kennedy button could conceivably place the administration in, the editors of YA-HOO, have withdrawn both photographs. After having conferred with the administration and having been informed of how some might construct the meaning of these pictures of of how some might construe the meaning of these pictures—what to the editors was humour, they were withdrawn.

The editors of YA-HOO would now like to explain the reasons for which these pictures were not withdrawn. They were not withdrawn because the editors of YA-HOO had become convinced that they were in bad taste. The editors of consider that, in this instance, bad taste would be ridiculing the candidates, or the subjects of the pictures, because of their religious preferences. This was in no way the intention of YA-HOO. The editors of YA-HOO did not agree to the withdrawal of these pictures because they were biased against any one, or several, church or churches. Nor was this a basis of the administration's action. They were withdrawn because the ignorant would see them as such.

As such, the administration's request that these two photographs not be printed, and the Student Senate Executive Committee's resolution requesting the editors to refrain from printing the pictures because of the possible detrimental effect to the University's prestige is understandable. YA-HOO has been censored, but not censured. However, in the final analysis the censor was not the administration. It has been, rather, censorship by a collection of parochial minds and those who would twist the meaning of anything into a fashion detrimental to the University for their own political ends.

Commuter Protests

To the Editor:

To the Editor:

When one is an Independent and a commuter, anger at administrative decisions is slow to rise, and is usually offset and quickly calmed by virtue of little contact with student life. However, when anger does arise it zooms to far heights and dares the laws of gravity and rationality to make it descend. This anger is now occasioned by short-sighted, heavy-handed action of an administration official in censoring part of Ya-Hoo magazine.

Senate's Fault?

To the Editor:

This past Wednesday I witnessed what could probably be called a flagrant mis-use of authority, to-wit the student senate refusal to allow a piece of legislation to come to the senate floor. This legislation had to do with a policy statement the senate in regards to censorship of student publications.

The major reason that the senate refused to be bothered by this was because the illustrious senate president said that the administration did not want to censor any student publication, also the administration did not want to accept the responsibility of censorship. YET THE ADMINISTRATION HAS CENSORED A STUDENT PUBLICATION namely YA-HOO and this legislation which was refused floor hearing would have not only prevented a re-occurrence of this censorship but would have placed the responsibilities of any published matter in it's proper place, namely upon the editors of the publications.

Indignantly.

The Heavy Hand

All hail the administration, it has struck again! Time and time again the high-ups at South College have suppressed the student body, subjugating it to their every whim, treating the individual student as one would treat an irresponsible Methodically, surely, we have been deprived of the means of self-expression. The tug of war, the pinning serenades, Spring day—all these traditions are no more. The overbearing administration sees to it that we make our beds; housing officers search our rooms day in and day out, obliterating any sense of privacy or individuality the foolish student might have secretly coveted.

The latest transgression of student rights has been the recent, all-too-hasty censoring of the campus humor magazine, the Ya-Hoo. This magazine, one of the few survivors of student expression, has finally come under the heavy hand of South College.

Whether or not the censorship of the two cartoons was justified is debatable, but certainly the manner in which this censorship was carried out is a flagrant usurpation of the individuality of the students concerned (those involved in the publication of the Ya-Hoo), and by extension, of the rights of all students at the University.

Can't we, as mature individuals, expect to be consulted before being overruled? Granted, the administration is in charge here, but its duty, it's raison d'etre, is to help the student, not to dominate and disregard him.

But let's not do anything about this situation. Let's seek refuge in a fog of apathy. Remember, Big Brother is watch-

Unwise Nibbling

To the Editor:

I agree completely with the "Two Angry Young Men" in the Collegian of Oct. 31, 1960. The nibbling away of one day of rest after another by one or another of the agencies of student government is not only unjust but unwise.

A busy school season of frantic study and activity must A busy school season of frantic study and activity must be salted with days of rest when the student can catch up, rest, or consolidate his gains. TREND TO KENNEDY

by BILL MANNING '62

As we enter the final days of the presidential campaign, the outcome is obviously still in doubt. Neither candidate has scored any major break-through that would warrant an undeniable claim to victory. Both men are still drawing massive crowds. National polls are quick to emphasize that the race is so close, their predictions may have a wide maris so close, t gin of error.

Yet, while it must be admitted that there is obvious winner, it is worth noting that a trend has developed since the national conventions. That trend has been in favor of Senator John F. Kennedy.

After the closing of the Republican Convention, the Las Vegas odds were 9-5 for Nixon. The Gallup Poll had the Vice-President leading 50-44%. Nixon had many things in his favor: (1) he was pressing his main theme of "peace", "prosperity", and "experience" in government, (2) there was talk of a southern revolt against the Democratic Party, (3) southern revolt against the Democratic Party, (3) there was a growing enthusiasm for Cabot Lodge, and (4) there was talk of Protestant antagonism toward Kennedy's faith. Indeed all of these factors gave the Nixon camp reason for optimism

But this optimism was short lived. Already the peace" argument was being dulled by Khrushchev's ctions, by trouble in the Congo and Cuba, by reveations that U.S. missile and space developments were becoming second-best, and by reports that our receiver was described. prestige was dropping rapidly.

The "prosperity" argument was being dulled by pusiness letdown and rising unemployment.

Yet, Richard Nixon was still able to claim greatr experience and maturity. This alone might have on it for him.

But, on the night of September 26, the bottom fell out of this last part of the Nixon theme. For it was on this night that the two men met for the first "Great Debate". Contrary to Republican expectations, it was Nixon who looked tired; it was Nixon who was put on the defensive by this new, vibrant Kennedy.

And what of the Southern revolt? Lyndon Johnn was healing that.
And Cabot Lodge? Well, thanks

And Cabot Lodge? Well, thanks to him, Nixon may have lost a good part of the South, and paradoxically, many northern Negro votes, Why? Because, much to the dismay of Mr. Nixon, Lodge promised a Harlem crowd that Nixon would appoint a Negro to the Cabinet, then had to retract the statement in North Carolina.

And what of the religious issue? It is conceivable that Ken-nedy's Roman Catholic faith may help, not hurt him. In the key in-dustrial states which will be de-cisive, Catholics comprise a big percentage of the big-city popula-tion which swings the states.

So, it would appear that after the first debate the tide began to turn. It is true that Nixon is the first decate the that Nixon is drawing great crowds, but Ken-nedy's crowds are surging, wildly enthusiastic, almost hysterical (even in Republican areas). The registration drives by the unions in the key states have increased Democratic chances. Kennedy has received a number of notable endorsements, among them that of the New York Times. Polls in New York, Ohio, Michigan, Cali-fornia, and other important states now show him in the lead. The now snow nim in the lead. The latest Gallup Poll (Oct. 26) showed Kennedy leading 49-46%, with 6% undecided. Las Vegas odds have shifted to Kennedy 2-1.

All of these observations are not meant to be a forecast of a Democratic landslide, or even a Democratic victory. The main objective has been to merely dem strate there is a trend toward the Senator from Massachusetts.

Whether this trend is enough to carry him to victory we cannot say . . . until the morning of November 9th

Cadets Honored At Fall Review

Five cadets in the Army ROTC program at UMass were designated Distinguished Military Students during the annual Fall Review ceremonies held Nov. 1 on campus.

The designations were officially announced by Col. James R. Weaver, commanding officer of the Army ROTC unit at the University. Col. Weaver awarded each honor cadet with a Distinguished Military Student Cer-tificate signed by Lt. Gen Edward J. O'Neill, commanding general, First U. S. Army.

Honorary Colonel at the pres-entation was Miss Harriet Cut-ler, junior of Melrose, who was selected by the cadet corps last year to serve until the choosing of a new Honorary Colonel at the annual Military Ball in Decem-

All are seniors.

Award ceremonies took place in the recently dedicated Dickinson Hall, new ROTC building. Representing the University was Dr. John Gillespie, Secretary and John Gillespie, Secretary and Administrative Assistant to the President.

Sports Car Enthusiasts Join Together In Amherst Club

Monday night at 8 p.m. in the Middlesex Room, the Amherst Region Sports Car Club will hold its first meeting. Membership will be open to all interested parties; they need not own cars nor be University students.

The club plans activities which touch on all phases of auto sports. touch on an phases of auto sports.

It will sponsor group outings to watch races, as well as events open to general participation, particularly rallies and gymkhanas.

The rallies consist of a driver and a navigator following a route by means of verbal in-structions, while the former maintains given average speeds and the latter computes their position and accuracy by the equa-tion relating time, speed, and distance. The gymkhana is a drivers' contest in which the en-trant strives to complete a closed course around pylons in the shortest possible time.

In addition, the club plans to have movies and speakers at some of its future meetings, and club members plan to attend and sponsor a variety of novelty events: hill climbs, auto-crosses, gimmick rallies, etc.

At the first meeting, the club will decide upon policies and con-

Halloween Spirit Is Evident Among The Dormitory Girls

On the night of October 31 one could not quite be sure if the darkness held only the usual shadows or rustling sounds. There were thoughts of ghosts with sunken faces and lighted pumpkins—so typical of the holiday. Throughout the campus, many Halloween parties were given.

LEWIS

Lewis was certainly no exception. The social committee, under the co-chairmen Linda Gagnier and Jane Tetreault, arranged a fun-filled, successful party which was held from 9:30 to 11.

Among the most interesting costumes were—The Gay Ninety Swimmers, South Sea Islanders, Pumpkins, Gal from the Roaring Twenties and a queen and her page. Prizes were given for the most gruesome, the prettiest, the cleverest, the funniest, and the cutest.

A Weekend Of Football

Although the University of Massachusetts football squad will be inactive this weekend, other college teams will be up and at each other Saturday. The Redmen have the open date by virtue of Brandeis' giving up football. The Redmen will lose no time in getting into shape for the crucial New Hampshire game, next Saturday at Alumni field.

Coach John Yoviscin's Johnies will be engaged in a vital contest, tomorrow, as they bank their Ivy League crown hopes on their clash with Princeton. Both Princeton and Yale are tied for the first slot, right now, and Harvard will have to beat Princeton. will have to beat Princeton to have much hope for top honors. Charlie Ravenel, the Harvard helmsman taken out of action by IlMass on October 1, is supported by the same part of the property UMass on October 1, is running with the varsity now, and it looks as if he'll be ready for the big game with Yale in two weeks.

The UConn football squad has voted unanimously to fly to Buffalo for Saturday's game. After last week's plane tragedy in Ohio, there had been some speculation also whether or not the team would fly.

The Holy Cross team will come up against Dayton at Worcester, hoping to keep its four game winning streak alive.

In the Yankee Conference, New Hampshire will meet Springfield, Maine visits Bowdoin, and Rhode Island has an open day.

Lockard Criticizes Novel Based On Senate Actions

by GERALD B. KAGAN '64
Professor Duane Lockard of Connecticut College for Women lectured in the Commonwealth
Room of the Student Union Wednesday afternoon on "The U.S. Senate in Fact and Fantasy." He based his lecture on a critical analysis of Alan Drury's political novel, Advise and Consent. "The main problems of most political novels" said Lockard, "is that the author is a novelist, and he weaves his own precon-ceived ideas into the novel."

Advise and Consent, based on he actions of the Senate, is misleading, unrealistic, and more entertaining than enlightening stated Professor Lockard, "The are many misleading, false pic-tures of the maneuvers of the Senate, a departure from realism in the portrayal of the morals of the legislators, and an over-dramatization of the personal problems of the senators," he said.

Lockard also discussed the book's weakness of not naming the political parties and rendering them meaningless. "At one point." he says, "the minority party took no action on a bill one point," he says, "the minor-ity party took no action on a bill that it opposed." He also men-tioned a section of the book in which the leader of the opposition party had a conference with the president concerning a swap of convention votes for a vote on a bill. "How often" asked Lockard, "does the leader of the opposition come to the president to make a bargain? Would Macy's come to Gimbels' and tell them their troubles and try to bargain with them?" In short, Lockard said that Advise and Consent contains "a good deal of frank, but often misleading, information wrapped up in a fascinating tale for the

When asked what book would give a good analysis of the Senate, Professor Lockard recom-mended David Trumen's The Congressional Party.

Analysis Of Mock Election

In attempting an analysis of last week's mock election it is of primary importance to define the electorate, thereby coming to what the results would have been hypothetically. This accomplished, the hypothetical and the actual have to be correlated.

Unfortunately the available data on the electorate is general and far from complete. We do know, however, that it is an electorate made up of intelligent 18 to 25 year olds financially dependent, and from a moderate income background.

Using this data as a base we can assume that the majority of the electorate leans toward or belongs to the Democratic Party. We make this assumption for two reasons:

- It has been established that first voters tend to vote as their parents. The income bracket of the parents inclines them to vote Democratic.
- 2. National polls show that young voters tend toward the Demo-cratic Party.

Our electorate, therefore, would tend to have a majority of Democrats, and it would be reasonable to expect a Democratic sweep.

The glaring divergence was not in the closeness of the Kennedy race—though this was surprising—but the fact that on the state level the Democrats were beaten four out of seven.

There doesn't appear to be an overriding season or issue pushing people away from the Democrats. If there were, there would be a consistency not the complete disparity that resulted. To find any reason why these four races did not fit the hypothetical, they have to be taken individually.

SALTONSTALL vs. O'CONNOR Reverence for "Old Salty" could have done this.

VOLPE vs. WARD M.D.C., D.P.W.

MEANS vs. McLAUGHLIN

With a margin of eight votes it appears that enough Volpe voters felt that the Lt. Governor should be of the same party. Independently McLaughlin probably would have won. Also, Means is

BROOKE vs. WHITE

Reverse discrimination could have done this.

(These summations are attempting to explain why someone normally expected to vote Democrat votes Republican. The person leaning to the Republicans initially would have other reasons.)

In short, this mock election seems to fit the pattern of growing

"independents" who vote not for the party—in many cases not the issue—but rather for the man. —P.W.

President Vindicated

As a student, I feel as strongly as anyone else that Ya-Hoo should not have been censored; that nothing should ever be censored by the administration; and that we should have a return of the vanished traditions.

However, as a student, I am also ashamed of the unfavorable comment, and, in my opinion ex-cessive condemnation heaped upon President Lederle. The President is new to the school, new to the state, and, in view of the difficulties of previous presidents with the august Mass. legislature quite logically reluctant to take

It also seems to me that, with the situation as it was, he had no choice in the matter. It was not President Lederle's idea to censor Ya-Hoo, but such an action can-not come from the lower echelons of the University administration.

I hope that in the future the administration will treat the stu-dents with the consideration which we deserve, but in return, we must treat President Lederle with the consideration which he deserves.

Honor Society Tutor — Where?

To the Editor:

We of the Math. IV class were especially enthusiastic about the tutoring service offered by the Phi Eta Sigma Honor Society be-cause most of the material in the course could well use some explanation.

The session Wednesday night would have afforded us a chance to understand the material before the hour exam . . . If the teacher had shown up.

Most of the Math IV class was waiting at the room designated by the Collegian. We waited almost an hour . . . and still no teacher had shown up.

Most people agree that the tutoring service offered by the honor society is a good and worthwhile activity. If, however, the instructors do not appear when and where they should, we are inclined to doubt how honorable the members of the honor society really are.

In Changing Times

The Great Choice

by MIKE PALTER '63

In this Presidential campaign one would be hard-pressed to ascertain the significant differences in the candidates, or in the parties. The Democratic Party cannot honestly be considered to be the party of the "working man," just as the Republican Party is not the party of "big business." Yet, even if between the candidates and parties differences do exist, these differences fade into irrelevance before the overall philosophy of both overall philosophy of both.

A significant illustration of this is the position of the candidates in regard to military spending. Both Kennedy and Nixon seem to be reaching for the stars in an effort to outdo each other. But in both cases the magic words are "more, more, and still more." I dare say that the only sane voice which can be heard in this "belicose forest" is that of Adlai Stevenson who advances the opinion that lasting peace can be gained not just by standing up to the Russians but by sitting down with them. (Since Adlai is not running this time, I guess he finally decided to buck the American Legion, the D.A.R.'s, etc.).

QUEMOY AND MATSU

It is indeed amusing to see that whenever a difference does occur such as Quemoy and Matsu in the TV debates, the candidates hedge in such a manner that this "difference" fades away like an old soldier. But let us look at this "Quemoy and Matsu issue," if just to amuse ourselves. Kennedy, I believe, took the practical stand in saying that these islands would be defended only if the attack was part of an invasion of Formosa. Nixon, however, took the somewhat idealistic stand that we must not give up an "inch" to the Communists. The amusing situation here is that both candidates advanced ignorant arguments and warped philosophies.

Kennedy's stand constitutes in a technical sense, appeasement, Nixon's stand is so idealistic as to be dangerous. The candidates, frantically grasping for differences, ignored the only true answer to this question. The answer is, in fact, a balance of the two swer to this questi positions—a mean.

Although one might tend to agree with something resembling nedy's choice—the choice of cautious practicality, Kennedy in the Although one might tend to agree the Kennedy's choice—the choice of cautious practicality, Kennedy in the last few weeks has bared (perhaps unconsciously) his true philosophy, bellicose as it may be. Kennedy made a fatal and significant mistake when he switched the political battle ground to Cuba. As much as any American might disagree with Castro, anyone with even a trace of dignity must believe in the right of self-determination and sovereignty. While Nixon represents an administration that has been dead through eight years of mistakes in Cuba, Kennedy reflects sovereignty. While Nixon represents an administration that has blundered through eight years of mistakes in Cuba, Kennedy reflects an aggressive, belligerent, and dangerous attitude—Dangerous because it condones external aggression; dangerous because it reeks of immorality; dangerous because some "liberals" are beginning to believe it.

CIVIL RIGHTS AND NATIONAL PRESTIGE

Of course, there are many issues. Let us take civil rights, for example. It was indeed delightful to hear that Mr. Kennedy aided the Rev. Martin Luther King. I wonder if Johnson (whom Kennedy picked) would have done the same! On the other hand, let us take Nixon. Richard Nixon represents an administration which has been relatively stagnant in this field. And, do not speak to me of the rebellious Democratic Congress. If you do, you are ignorant of the powers of a popular President; somewhat indecisive and mediocre as far as Presidents go but, nevertheless, popular.

Even the so called "significant issues" are, because of complex considerations, irrelevant. To illustrate this point, let us take the example of our "prestige." A vital tenet in Kennedy's platform is that the prestige of the U.S. is falling. Kennedy places the great part of the blame for this on the Republican administration. Nixon, to the contrary, affirms our high prestige throughout the world and raps Kennedy's stand because it undermines the "true image" of the United States.

Unfortunately, in this argument, also, both candidates are in error. Kennedy, when he speaks of our declining prestige completely ignores the true catalysts of this situation; revolution, liberation, and nationalism. A President is powerful but not powerful enough to single handedly counteract these forces, especially with a rebellious

And Nixon ... Well! Nixon is guilty of disputing that which is obviously true. No doubt, our prestige is falling. I suggest, however, that if Richard disputes this, the American people should pay his expenses for a trip to—let's say—Japan, Mexico, West Germany, Italy, Argentina, Great Britain, Turkey, France, Egypt, etc., etc. (See N.Y. Times, Nov. 2, 1960, p.29).

How many of us have tried to rationalize and thus to justify a vote for either Nixon or Kennedy? How many of us support one of these candidates in the positive sense? Perhaps Kennedy or Nixon will change. Indeed, perhaps the leopard will change his spots! ... "Beautiful Dreamer."

It is indeed disheartening to see the mad rush of liberals to Kennedy's side. Do they detect a hope? Do they hope for a change? I have bad news for them!

Yet, in the midst of this chaos true patriotism rises above partipolitics. We are told to vote—vote—"either for Nixon or Kennedy. san politics. We are told to vote—vote—"either for Nix We don't care whom you vote for, but at least vote!"

Let me hambly ask one question: If this is an example of choice, then pray tell, what in heaven's name is arbitrary?

New Scoring Method To Penalize Guessing

Northfield, Vt. (I.P.)-A way ply missing the correct answer to penalize "blind guessing" on multiple-choice tests and at the same time reward partial knowledge of subject matter was recently described here by Dr. Clarence F. Willey, head of the department of psychology and education at Norwich University.

He presented a scoring system for such tests which allows the student a selection of three options for a five-part question, in-stead of the usual "one best an-swer" choice. Dr. Willey also recently read a paper describing his "guess-proof" test to the dele-gates of one of the sessions of the American Psychological Association held in Chicago.

"These three options include one which the student believes to be correct—and two he believes to be definitely wrong," Dr. Wil-ley said. "The student is warned that he will receive a three-point penalty for labeling the correct answer 'definitely wrong', but only a one point penalty for simThis method of scoring, Dr. Willey said, "rewards analytical judgment based on partial knowledge and reduces the influence of chance in achieving a good test score. Thus examinees no longer cel that multiple-choice tests are merely 'guessing games,' and the student who is not a likely Phi Beta Kappa prospect still can prove that he has studied conscientiously, and is able to avoid ridiculous errors."

The educator added that "it has been been been seen and the studied conscientiously and the studied conscientiously.

has been recognized for a number of years that a student who does not select the correct answer to a multiple-choice question may nonetheless have considerable knowledge of the subject for which partial credit should be given."

Values Studied Nutritional

Down at the dairy cattle research barn there are seven cows with windows in their sides. The technical term for these windows is rumen fistulae. The rumen is the first and much the largest chamber of a cow's compound stomach. A fistula is an artificial opening into any part of an ani-mal's anatomy.

The first question the visitor asks is, "What goes on here?"
The answer is that an arrangement like this makes it much easier for the animal nutritionist to study what goes on in the cow's stomach. The opening is large enough to admit the human hand and arm so that samples of the stomach contents can be readily removed for study in the laboratory. It also permits the introduction into the rumen of samples of feed in plastic bags, which may be left there for varying periods of time in order to measure the digestibility of the feed.

Many different studies are possible with such a set-up. Just now and for a period of over a year and for a period of over a year past the device is being used to measure, (1) the nutritive value of single species of the forage crops commonly fed to dairy cows in this region, and (2) to serve as a source of rumen fluid for use in measuring the feeding value of dairymens' hay statewide by means of a so-called artificial rumen in the laboratory.

The second question almost always is, "Doesn't it hurt the cows?" There is of course some cows?" There is of course some discomfort at the time of the operation although pain is dead-

Two of these seven cows have had these windows in their sides for about six years and they are sleek, fat, and sassy. A speci-fic illustration indicates the welfare of these animals. The cow question was used last winter four digestion trials and also had 48 plastic bags in her rumen for a total time of 576 hours. She calved normally about two weeks ago and is giving approximately 70 pounds of milk daily. None of cows has ever shown the slightest objection to the poking around in their rumens attendant upon the placement and removal of the plastic bags and the sampling of rumen fluid.

ner, David Owen, and Howard Barnes, all members of the ex-periment station staff. The operations on the cows have been per-formed by Dr. Russell E. Smith of the Department of Veterinary Science. The operation consists of excision of a section of hide, abdominal wall, and rumen wall about 6" in diameter in the tri-angular area on the cow's left side immediately posterior to the rib cage and anterior to the hook bone. The fistula is made permanbone. The fistula is made perman-ent by suturing the cut edge of the rumen wall to the edge of the abdominal wall. A plastic tube called a cannula, is placed in the fistula equipped with rubber flanges, and threaded so that a collar of the same material is screwed tightly to its inner end. The outer end of the cannula is also threaded to receive a cap which is kept in place at all times except when access to the rumen is desired. Such an arrangement prevents spilling of the rumen and defensive play of end Roger Ken Palm carried DeMinico, swamped the highly favored UConn rookies Saturday, 17-0, on Alumni Field.

The freshmen from Storrs had been undefeated in their last 10 starts, and were unscored upon this year until they themselves were shut out by the Redmen. When the game started UConn looked like it would dominate the game as expected. That impression didn't last long, however, for by the end of the first quarter UMass had taken positive control

When UMass was stymied for when UMass was stymed for three downs, kicking expert Dick Farrell moved in and booted a field goal to put the UM frosh ahead, 3-0.

UMASS CONTROLS BALL

The Redmen, although unable to score, controlled the ball for remainder of the half. The Redremainder of the half. The Red-men gained 114 yards rushing during the half, to UConn's 20. In passing UMass gained 70 yards, while the Huskies failed to complete a toss.

The ball changed hands three times in the third quarter before Roger DeMinico recovered a fumble on the UM 41, to start the Redmen on the road to another score. The big play of that drive was a 27-yard pass completed from Gordie Plumb to halfback Freddie Lewis on the UConn 28.

After one unsuccessful pass attempt by Plumb, UConn was called for interference, and the resulting penalty put the Redmen on the 9. Ken Palm rushed the ball to the five, and Gordie Plumb then completed a pass to end Sam Slick for the score—the first score against UConn this year. FARRELL BOOTS EXTRA

Dick Farrell came in to convert the extra point, and UMass was ahead, 10-0.

In the fourth quarter, just after UMass had punted to the Conn. 32, Roger DeMinico threw UConn 32, Roger DeMinico threw UConn quarterback Tom Dooling for a 10 yard loss. FROSH HALFBACK FREDDIE LEWIS WAS THE SECOND leading ground gainer for UMass Saturday. Lewis carried 14 times for 40 yards. Ken Palm was the leader, with 20 carries for 78 yards.

In a slick lateral play, half-back Tom Ryan carried to the 17.
Tom Infusino then carried twice for the Redmen to bring the ball to the UConn 12 and a first down. On the next play Plumb, in sort of a combination jump pass-later-al behind him sent Dave Hallinan to the three.

DEMINICO SCORES

Three plays later Plumb passed to DeMinico in the end zone. Farrell again converted, and the score became UMass 17, UConn

0. The UMass defensive unit did a fine job in staving off the hun-gry Huskies for the remainder of the contest, and preserved the 17-0 victory.

FRESHMAN FOLLOW-UPS

The UConn freshmen hadn't scored less than thirty points in any of their three games previous DeMinico was the star of the game for the Redmen, as he intercepted three UConn passes, caught four passes, and scored one touchdown Quarterback Gordie Plumb completed 9 for pass attempts, tossing two TD's . . . Redmen Need Support In YanCon Title Race

The UMass-New Hampshire varsity game, to be played here on Alumni Field Saturday, took an added significance when New Hampshire defeated UConn last week, 17-9. The Yankee Conference is now in a three-way tie at the top between UMass, UConn, and New Hampshire. At least one of the teams will be eliminated when the Redmen taskle the Wildeats.

same. At least one of the teams will be eliminated when the Redmen tackle the Wildcats.

Connecticut still has to play Rhode Island and, judging by the trouble URI gave the Redmen, the Rams could just muster up one of their frequent upsets. If so, then the UMass-UNH game could decide the winner of the YanCon title.

The winner of this Saturday's game, therefore, would at least clinch a tie for the title. Coach Studley and the football squad have been working this past week and will continue to work this coming week, putting in many rugged hours trying to bring the YanCon Crown to UMass. Much of the success or failure of the team depends on the students and other fans of the Redmen.

In the New Hampshire upset of UConn, the Durham fans got behind the team and started yelling, "Conference Title," when the Wildcats were behind. That cheering and goading from the fans fired up the UNH crew enough to come from behind and defeat the highly touted Huskies.

New Hampshire will be out for another win this Saturday, only this week the game is in the Redmen hunting grounds. A packed audience would undoubtedly give the Redmen the spark to stave off the hungry Wildcats. It is hoped that, even though this is a three-day weekend, most fans who would normally go home would be attracted to stay by the lure of a YanCon football title—the first in the thirteen year history of the Conference for UMass.

It's possible, and it's up to you, the supporters of the team, the grandstand quarterbacks and those who have been yelling for a YanCon Crown, to stay on Campus this weekend and come out en masse to cheer the Redmen to the title.

Early counts gave the 35-year old O'Connor a commanding lead of as many as 29,000 votes; however poor showing in both Boston and his home city, Spring-field, offset the other large cities and shifted the balance in favor of "Salty".

At 8:30 a.m. the counts gave 946,000 to Volpe nad 908,000 to his Democratic opponent Joseph Ward of Fitchburg. These figures include tablations of 1,780 precincts of the state's 1,984.

The governorship race was long in doubt, with Ward ahead from the beginning, until the late returns from Republican areas pushed Volpe over the top.

In a victory statement issued at 2:15 a.m. Volpe expressed his gratitude to "thousands of supporters and workers". Volpe stated, "Thanks to those who have received me so graciously and joined with us ir the great effort to bring Massachusetts back into a position of honor and leadership".

Following a traditional pattern, Massachusetts voters elected a split ticket, with Democratic candidates sweeping all other state offices.

Democratic candidates elected Massachusetts were: Edward McLaughlin has carried the lieutenant governorship, defeat-ing Republican Augustus Means. Secretary of State: Kevin Forty-three-year-old Kennedy's election makes him the youngest man to be elected to that office, and the first Roman Catholic to occupy the White House.

The New England states and New York gave Kennedy a big push toward victory with their early results in his favor. He carried Massachusetts, Connecticult, and Rhode Island; Nixon took Maine, Vermont, and New Hampshire.

Kennedy's electoral vote total in New England and New York gave him a whopping 73 votes.

Other big states turning to Kennedy in early results are Pennsylvania (32 electoral votes); Texas (34 votes); and Illinois (27 votes).

unite behind the victor and give him full support. Nixon was speaking from his Los Angeles headquarters at the Ambassador Hotel there. Democratic leaders elsewhere regarded the speech as a concession, however.

Kennedy and his staff, awaiting the results at their Hyannisport headquarters, refused to make any statements on victory pending action from the Vice-President in Los Angeles.

The new president was born May 29, 1917 at Brookline, Massachusetts. He is the son of multi-millionaire Joseph Kennedy, one-time American Ambassador to Great Britain.

Kennedy is a graduate of Har-vard and served in the Navy in World War Two. He was cited for heroism as commander of a P-T boat in the Pacific. Kennedy saved most of his crew after his boat was rammed by a Japanese destroyer.

Your Distinguished Visitors' Program

The unique student-sponsored "Distinguished Visitors' Program"—a program created last vear Program"—a program created last year student Senate and ratified by the student ody-is currently under way. Although hardly anywas heard from the program since it was in the spring, the University students should expect to reap benefits beginning next semester from their $1.50 tax-investment in the program.

The Distinguished Visitors' Program, an original UMass idea not to be found on any other campus in the nation, is an effort on the part of University students to provide further educational and cultural opportunities for the campus community. As indicated in the preamble to the program's constitution, its purpose is "to further the pursuit of excellence in our scholastic society."

The aim is to be carried out by bringing to the Uni-The aim is to be carried out by bringing to the University a distinguished person for lectures, informal discussions, and personal meetings with the students. Naturally, however, the length of time that this person will be on campus must be determined by the amount of money available. Since the program is still in its inception, it will undoubtedly begin moderately with a three- or four-day stay by the visitor. But in the future, the assembly hopes, this activity will mushroom into a program which will attract an outstanding person on a semester basis.

The University Assembly—which includes the provost, Shannon McCune; two faculty members, Dr. Louis S. Greenbaum and Dr. George Goodwin; a trustee, Mr. Jonh W. Haigis; one alumnus; as well four senators and four appointed students—re-ntly called its first meeting to discuss the various facets of this program as well as its philosophy.

As drawn up at present, the Visitors Program practically unlimited in its scope. As one member of the Assembly stated, almost anyone from a guest lecturer to a musical ensemble, from a theatrical group that would lecture in certain classes to political candidates, would fit into the scheme of this

The assembly is now asking R.S.O. organizations for their suggestions. But all students—for they are the ones who are making this program possible— are also asked to submit their ideas for an outstanding visitor or some other special group that they would like to see brought to campus. FALLOUT

by M. S. STEINBERG

The following article, written by Dr. M. S. Steinberg of the University's Physics Department, is a critique of a recently published book on radioactive fallout and its implications. The Book, Fallout*, has been placed on order in the Goodell Library and should be expected shortly.

America's first comprehensive book on radioactive fallout appears fully six years after the March 1, 1954 explosion at Bikini shocked the world and exposed the secrets of the so-called hydrogen bomb. Why so late? The physical principles and incredible radioactivity of the new thermonuclear weapons were soon deduced by R. E. Lapp and J. Rothblat, becoming internationally known within the year. But professional scientists—the natural interpreters of new developments in the science of destruction—did little to develop public consciousness. The timely "trial" and subsequent dismissal from public service of J. R. Oppenheimer had put them on notice that such behaviour might be considered "disloyal." Though they might express concern in private, they said little in public until the fall of 1956, when Adlai Stevenson made open discussion of nuclear weapons testing "respectable" by raising the issue of the fallout danger in his election campaign.

Fallout's 12 essays (by 10 authors) are for the most part informative, readable and up-to date. The essay titles are indicative of content: "The Bombs and Their Products," 'The Global Pattern of Fallout," "From Bomb to Man," "The Rising Level of Fallout," "Biological Effects of Radiation," "Radiation and Future Generations," "Protection and Treatment," "Detection of Bomb Tests," "Nuclear War," "National Survival." Two of the essays, "Radiation Accidents" and "Civil Defense," seem to me essentially valueless. The former is overly concerned with praising the safety record of the Atomic Energy Commission's industrial

The author does not discuss the numerous exposures to fallout in Nevada and Utah, neglects to follow up reports of accidents (one of them catastrophic) during Russian nuclear tests, and skates glibly over the fate of Marshall Islanders subjected to intense fallout. "Civil Defense" attempts to develop national plans to replace the current confusion in that area, but the essay is diffuse and irresolute. The simple truth is that civilization cannot survive nuclear

It is regrettable that the writers of Fallout have not explored questions which might lead to value judgments. For example, the radiological destructivenes of the thermonuclear weapons which have been tested dwarfs to insignificance the explosive destructiveness. Yet it has not been asked if these "hydrogen bombs" have been intended as explosives, producing radioactive fallout only incidentally, or if they have been purposely designed as radiological wea-

A true hydrogen explosion would produce radioactivity which is feeble as compared with that observed. Radioactive fallout, however, consists overwhelmingly of fission products, produced from natural uranium when struck by the fast neutrons released in hydrogen reactions. But why must the uranium be there? The editor of Fallout claims that a heavy casing is required to hold the bomb together for a sufficient length of time; if fabricated of uranium, fission of the casing adds to the explosive energy. However, increasing the casing thickness beyond a certain point decreases the explosive energy and radioactivity produced per unit weight. Evidence from past explosions and from semiofficial prognostications for nuclear war indicate that the "ideal" bomb-having the greatest destructive power per pound — is about half-and-half (see Fallout, pp. 25 and 163). If in such a weapon another dense metal were substituted for uranium—i.e., tungsten—, about 80% (the cube root of one half) of the range and 64% of the area of destruction would be retained. The sacrifice would seem to be modest enough, to anyone interested only in explosive force. But what if military science prefers truly genocidal weapons? There would then be little attraction in 64 or 100 square miles of explosive destruction when 10,000 square miles of radiological devastation is available simply by replacing a tungsten casing with one of uranium. Fallout's editor writes off the nature of the new weapons as due to the cheapness of natural uranium as an explosive. That seems too easy and conventional.

Senate Retort

To the Editor:

I would like to clarify certain aspects of the Ya-Hoo incident, as it relates to the student body.

The administration in no way desires to censor y student publications on campus. No procedures any student publications on campus. No procedures exist or are in the process that would bring this about. The present administration's policy in this area remains the same as it was under the previous administration; namely, the students have demonstrated responsibility in the past that makes any type of censorship or administration control completely unnecessary. I might add that this policy will remain as long as we, the students, continue to demonstrate this responsibility.

Now, what is responsibility? It is not agreeing

Now, what is responsibility? It is not agreeing disagreeing with any specific philosophy, but it expressing ourselves in such a way that our voices is expressing ourseives in such a way that our voices will be listened to both on and off campus. Every major restrictive action taken by the administration in the past few years (and I refer to Spring Day, the rope pull, and the drinking ban) has come only after the students have shown repeatedly their irresponsibility in these matters. I realize that these sentiments may not be well-received in many quarntiments may not be well-received in many quarters but there are many things that we students can accomplish to further the University; and I would suggest that we begin to concern ourselves more with these challenges and stop complaining every-time we make a mistake and get called for it.

Everyone seems to be in agreement that the administration handled the Ya-Hoo incident in a very poor manner. I completely agree, I refer you to the following letter:

November 1, 1960

Dr. John Lederle, President University of Massachus Amherst, Massachusetts Dear Dr. Lederle:

The Executive Committee of the Student Senate voted this evening to request the co-editors of Ya-Hoo to voluntarily withdraw the disputed two pages from the forthcoming issue. I believe that they will comply with the request and call Mr. Ham Newell with a new set up for the two pages.

with a new set up for the two pages.

The Executive Committee, with a unanimous vote, also instructed me to register a strong protest to you concerning the Administration's handling of this situation. It was argued that many responsible members of Student Government could have been reached on Monday afternoon when Mr. Newell was given instructions to delete the pages in question. It is also our feeling that Student Government has succeeded so well at the University only because the students in positions of responsibility have acted in a responsible manner. We urge that in future situations we be allowed to exercise our continued responsibility prior to final decisions by the Administration.

I can also pass on from the Executive Commit-tee the sincere hope that this incident will in no way impair student-administration relations. In the long run we are all working toward the same goal, a big ger and better University.

Sincerely, Dennis J. Twohig, President Student Senate

I might add that this letter was sent long before the Collegian belatedly printed the story and before the Letters to the Editor's page became the center of the Ya-Hoo controversy.

In conclusion, so that there may be no mistaking my position, I firmly believe and will continue to struggle for an increased student voice in University affairs. There are very few areas that do not concern the students and where things concern us we should have the right to express our opinions and have them heard and heeded. The only limit to the have them heard and heeded. The only limit to the amount of responsibility we can attain is the amount of responsibility we evidence in trying to attain it.

Dennis J. Twohig President, Student Senate

The answers to such questions make a great deal of difference regarding the benignity or brutality of those who wield under power, and regarding their envisaged solution of social problems.

In spite of the shortcomings, however, Fallout is the best available starting point for factual study-well worth consulting to the point of familiarity.

A MODEST PROPOSAL

A movement is afoot-a shocking, startling movement-to solve the problem of overcrowded colleges by the simple expedient of refusing admission to women at coeducational schools!

It is argued by proponents of this plan that in today's world a college education is absolutely essential for a man, while for a woman it is merely a pleasant interlude between adolescence and housewifery. There is simply not room enough for both men and women in our overburdened colleges; therefore, in all fairness, women who have far less need of a degree than men, must

Well sir, when I heard this drastic proposal, I was so shocked that I sat right down and light a Marlboro. I always sit right down and light a Marlboro when I am shocked. I also always sit right down and light a Marlboro when I am not shocked. There is no time, no condition, no mood, no estate when it isn't a source of soul-deep gratification to settle back and have a full-flavored smoke—Marlboro, the filtered cigarette with the unfiltered taste —Marlboro, the jewel of cigarettes—Marlboro, the pinnacle of the tobacconist's art-Marlboro, my comfort, haven, and snug

Well sir, I sat smoking my Marlboro and thinking over the shocking proposal to keep women out of coed schools, and hoping fervently that another solution can be found. If the calamitous day ever comes when women are banned from coed colleges, I will gnash my teeth and rend my garments and take to my bed without supper. Like any other Marlboro man, I love women.

I love the sight and sound of them, the cut of their jibs, their beauty and grace, their cunning little spitcurls, their sleek dimples, their middy blouses, their aura and effluvium. Moreover, I freely admit that when it comes to brainpower, they can give the average man cards and spades and big casino too. It would be a shame, a disgrace and a catastrophe to keep these beautiful, intelligent creatures out of college. However, it is always wise in time of fair weather to prepare for foul. What if the advocates of keeping women out of college begin to gather strength? We who abhor this fiendish plan must be ready with a substitute... and it just so happens I have one—and a mighty ingenious little plan it is, if I say so myself. Granted that classroom seats are in short supply, and granted that men need degrees more than women, it is still not necessary to bar women from college. Let them go to college but—here is teams in New England have more victories. These schools are Yale, Tufts, and Southern Connecticut... Coach Studley and his staff scouted Chief Boston's crew Saturday in Durham... Sam Lussier, the top Redmen ground gainer, broke two ribs in the BU game and will be out for the remainder of the season... UNH is reportedly a very enthusiastic, hard hitting team, much like our frosh squad... Speaking of the yearlings — the crowd which braved the crisp, windy November afternoon to cheer them to victory, made more noise than some varsity crowds. Let's hope they all are in the stands this Saturday... Maybe some of the football minded members of the faculty will schedule tests or quizes for this Saturday.

This solution, it seems to me, answers every requirement. It releases hundreds of thousands of classroom seats to needy males. At the same time, it does not deprive women of the rich and varied benefits of campus life. They can join sororities, shoot pool at the Union, build bonfires for Homecoming games, pour at the Dean's tea, plait daisies in their hair, organize drag races, sculpt in ice, hook rugs, walk their cheetalis, play Monopoly, find love —in short, they can do anything except go to class.

Tell the truth, girls: Is that bad?

In New England Meets

by DICK QUINN '62

Massachusetts, the Cinderella team of the New England cross-country circuit, displayed great courage and will while losing by six points, 90-96, to a heavily favored squad from Brown University Monday afternoon.

Davy Balch ran as well as ever as he wound up in the fifth slot in an even 22 mins. Walt Barker of Holy Cross also had a time of 22 min. behind Balch, Doug MacGregor of UNH ran his usual good race, finishing in seventh place. BU's "Red" Muller, who was the only opporate their land. was the only opponent until now that Balch had not defeated, finished in eighth place. Bobby Bamberger finished ninth for Providence, and Bradu of the Coast Guard took tenth.

Ralph Buschmann, co-capt. of ne Footrick hill and dalers, ran to a sixteenth place finish, while "Obie" O'Brien was on his heels in eighteenth place. Dick Blomstrom was in twenty third place with an unofficial timing of 22 min. 42 secs., and teammate

Coach Footrick was jubilant with the great showing of his harriers. Rand Lectureship Opens With Shakespeare Lecture

In the first of a series of lectures commemorating Professor Emeritus Frank Rand, a former UMass faculty member, Alfred B. Harbage spoke on Shakespeare and Shakespeare's audience at the Student Union Ballroom on Tuesday, November 8.

Two important questions usually come to the minds of students of Shakespeare: did Shake-speare write the plays attributed to him, and was Shakespeare the kind of man who could have writ-ten the plays that he did?"

'The mysteries of Shakespeare mystery which surrounds Shakespeare's audience," said Harbage.

He feels the lack of knowledge bout Shakespeare's audience and physical theater caused a at many misinterpretations at t. "Scholars at first believed that the theaters were small, primitive and rather comical. Now, however, it is known that the theaters were large, imposing and a chief tourist attraction to visitors of Elizabethan England. In fact replicas of these theaters are now being reproduced in many parts of the world."

Harbage would rather the audience than the theater be reproduced, however. "At present, even as in Shakespeare's time we acknowledge that his plays are excellent, and it is a known fact that good plays nourish good audiences."

There are the two questions. First, who constituted Shake-speare's audience and why did they like him? "Earlier students that at the Globe theater, Shake Shakespeare's audience was well aware of the familiar quotation, 'The best is a rare and precious thing,' "he said.

of Shakespeare imagined his audience to be ignorant 'wretched beings'. However, we now know speare's theater, everyone from mobles to discriminating com-moners, looking for an enjoyable evening, was present. There was a marked lack of class distinction a marked lack of class distinction at the Globe". Harbage feels this was probably due in part to the fact that only the best plays available were presented at the Globe, and the audience had a similar goal, to be well enter-tained. "According to all evidence Shakespears's audience were well

Urban Crisis Is Subject Of Senator Williams Speech

by GERALD B. KAGAN '64 Senator Harrison Williams of city because N.J. addressed a small, but in-terested crowd in Bowker auditerested crowd in Bowker auditorium on Thursday, Nov. 10, 1960. The Senator is currently serving on many committees and subcommittees dealing with the current urban crisis on which he based his informal talk.

Senator Williams expressed and discussed some of the major prob-lems of the urban situation.

The main problem, according to The main problem, according to the senator, is that of the suburbs. "The middle class American," says Williams, "is fleeing in his automobile to the suburb, and he has left the cities with residential problems. The lower class citizen has replaced the fleeing middle class, and these people are the basis of our slums."

"Following the middle class", says Williams, "are the manufac-turers who also move out of the city because their workers live in the suburbs."

What can we do about these slums? "Private investors don't seem to like the idea of tearing the areas down and then building them up again. They say it's the government's responsibility, so let the government clear them up. We have 10 million Americans living in slums, and although many agencies and commission a'e been set up, we have hardly

The concept of urban renewal recently came into being, and the government has had blocks of decay bulldozed, and replaced by housing put up by private investors. This is a good concept but it has had some unhappy results. Some people were paying minimal rents where they lived, and when they were ousted, they went farther out in the city and created further slum areas. Some people

Wednesday's election will be held in the lobby of the SU. The Student Government Association is hoping that there will be even a larger turnout than the 60% of last week's election.

A NEW LOOK AT ROTO

The Air Force annually trains around 100,000 ROTC cadets at 175 colleges, to get 3500 new lieutenants. Army ROTC, at 245 campuses, trains 155,000 cadets and commissions 12,500. At some schools, the cost for each senior student commissioned is $50,000. Thousands of active duty people are tied up teaching the students.

On this campus, USAF has already initiated a change. Instead of the four semesters of ROTC classes required before, two semesters of classes are required now with a leadership lab which requires one hour a week for four semesters. Army ROTC has yet, on this campus, to change their program of wasteful, cumbersome operation known as basic ROTC. Should Army ROTC neglect to change their program soon, the attractive USAF plan could leave the standard Army program with few cadets.

Now, the Air Force is planning to do away with the basic AFROTC completely. Instead, they are proposing a scholarship plan by which 10,000 outstanding junior and senior students will benefit. By this plan, the Air Force expects to get their 3500 new cadets annually. This plan will save millions of dollars as the Air Force does not benefit from the 90 students out of 100 in Basic ROTC who do not go advanced.

Since the Army ROTC program is much larger, the cost of training cadets in Army ROTC must be much higher in proportion to the students who take Air Force ROTC. If the USAF thinks it necessary to cut down on their training program to save the country millions of dollars, why doesn't the Army also start thinking about what they can do to reduce or eliminate unit training in Basic

It is true that the Air Force's needs are much more defined than the Army's, but there are many students who are less than interested in ROTC and who are costing their country millions of dollars that could be used to better advantage.

If the Army eliminates Basic ROTC and also offers tasty scholarships such as the Air Force plans do, is it not feasible to think that the Army could also meet their requirement of 12,500 new lieutenants that they commission annually from schools offering B.S.A. and M.S.

Scientific Humanism

There is a group of people in the western world whose philosophy of life is built on the concepts of scientific humanism alone. Man, they say, must take charge of his own future and can expect no help from any other source. Based on an evolutionary concept, their arguments are persuasive and appeal to many forward-looking men and women among whom are some prominent scientists.

Other forward-looking men and women doubt Other forward-looking men and women doubt that scientific ideology alone can produce a life philosophy upon which an ideal social order can be built. The humanist points out that despite 2500 years since the Buddha and 2000 years since Christ our modern society is rife with confusion. Our moral conductions and products are in a compared to products. and spiritual values are in a sorry mess. He neglects to consider that 300 years of scientific enlighten-ment has done nothing to mitigate that regrettable commentary.

Science does not account for man's unreasoned preferences and desires, for his intense feelings and emotions. There is no scientific basis for man's love of beauty as it finds expression in nature, literature and the arts and all other values best described as spiritual. Even the scientist's attitude toward the world and its problems is grounded in his inner exmore than his rational conclusion

The religionist assumes an all-wise spiritual intelligence. The humanist regards the universe as an impersonal mechanism, self-organized and operating, with no supernatural agency needed to account for it. The fact remains that both conclusions grow from assumptions. The scientific humanist fits facts about the universe together to formulate laws of nature. They are his laws. The religionist sees facts too, but he recognizes another set of principles by which he reaches an understanding of things outside the realm of science. Such things as beauty and love and the feeling that there is a spiritual force in nature. The scientific humanist denies authority to the inner voice. The religionist believes it to be not only trustworthy but indispensable for understanding man and nature.

No orthodox biologist today speaks of "purpose" in an organism. "There must be a scientific explanation." What is it? Final causes, the influence of the future on the present, are opposed to the philosophy of science. Biological purposiveness can neither be proved or disproved. The religionist believes that biological purposiveness is the most primitive psychical phenomena and that from it come all the more complex expressions of mind, culminating in man in abstract thought. To analyze this process in terms of matter and energy is a problem of morphogenesis which has not been solved. The mind factor has been defined from several points of view but never explained. Nobody knows what mind is.

Beauty cannot be analyzed, measured or described. It is experienced. Beyond the esthetic satisfactions for many people is a deep yearning for higher values still, for an unseen presence in the universe, and the conviction that one can communicate with it and draw assurance from experiences that are called religious. Science needs to be supplemented by the gifts of the spirit. The scientific humanist cannot reconstruct society by the optimism of humanism alone.

Our Enclave

To the Editor:

There comes a time when even the most reticent observers of our University feel an urge to speak. From experience these same observers realize that it is easier to keep still and just watch the actions of those responsible for the well being of our college community. Yet, we see responsible officials either defaulting in their duties or so superimposing themselves in the jurisdiction of others better qualified that administrative impotency occurs, Now I MUST speak.

At the present time we have one of the most picturesque college campuses to be found anywhere in the United States. In regards to equipment, the University represents a noble attempt to provide further education for the swelling numbers of Massachusetts residents. As for quality instruction, our school still needs strengthening, but we feel secure in the knowledge that our former president was able to win support for his last theme—"Yes, we have the buildings now, but without quality instruction they are mere hollow shells." Now I would like to ask why we haven't a college in spite of the fact that we have a pleasant campus, an equipped school, and a growing staff of quality instruction?

To start with, our beloved alma mater has been without a guiding To start with, our beloved alma mater has been without a guiding hand since last May when little minds cheered the departure of a threat to their "Mass. Aggie" concepts. Already the little minds have bestirred themselves into fallaciously thinking they are capable of filling bigger shoes. We have seen last year's pleasant police chief usurp so much power that he now acts as University Commander-in-Chief. Additional officers added to the force this year have been utilized for Gestapo control of the student body. From the students' point of view, the police have instituted a police state consisting of room searches, insults, accusations, and intimidations.

Last year's housing officer is this year's N.K.V.D. Commandant. Sweeping through study rooms go unseen squads. Everything is suspect. Closets are searched for contraband equipment such as hotplates and irons. Personal effects are mawed for whiskey. Letter openers and Boy Scout equipment are confiscated as "dangerous." Magazine pictures of "La Female" are ordered off the walls; even pictures of Mom are suspect.

The Dean of Women is not to be outdone by the others. Reports from our sister dorms indicate that institutional rigor mortus is the fall style for them as well. The only exception is that this year the infamous "Registered Social Events" are conspicuously absent.

Men's affairs on campus have not been neglected by our faithful Dean of Men. His problem this year is to decide whether he is running a nursery or a penitentiary. Meanwhile the male student body suffers from his vacillation. As for the Dean's Assistant, we do not hear much from him. In many respects this is too bad because behind his exterior of petty regulations lies a man sympathetic to the needs of "Baker-Hill Men."

During the summer we were all happy to learn that our scho again had a guiding spirit. We are still happily awaiting the spirit to show himself. The student body can easily understand that one new to the campus scene is not equipped to establish just and effective policy immediately; however, conditions are not getting better and it is about time for action. It is further hoped that our new president will be of the stature to convert institutional paralysis into institu-

Before closing I would like to reminisce about the days in grammar school when we started each day with the flag salute. It was our privilege to be learning to live with Democracy. Today we are confused about our training. It would seem that living in a community police state, we are learning to live with another system.

Signed.

Test Protested

To the Editor: -

Having been informed that the Department of Military Science has scheduled a test for November 12, which marks the center of our three day weekend, I find cause to wonder how an organization which considers itself responsible can be so blind, thoughtless, or apathetic to the realities of student life.

Dear Irate Cadet:

Among the "realities of student life" is the fact that you do not have a three day weekend including 12 November. Classes will be held as scheduled on Saturday throughout the University.

You will note that scheduling is so sensitive to balancing Monday Wednesday-Friday instruction with Tuesday-Thursday-Saturday classes that the following Tuesday has been designated as a 'Friday' to replace the 11th for scheduling purposes. If you throw out Saturday you once again have an imbalance in instruction which has been determined to be needful

It's your instruction, Holiday Rebel. What are you here for?

Rostow To Speak On New Administration

America's international prospects under a new administration will be discussed next week at the University of Massachusetts in a major public address by W. W. Rostow, authority on foreign affairs who has acted as an adviser to President-elect John F. Kennedy.

Professor Rostow, professor of economic history at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, will be the first speaker under a new Alumni War Memorial Lectureship established at the University. His talk will be given at 8:15 nm. on Monday. given at 8:15 p.m. on Monday, Nov. 14, in the Student Union ballroom on campus.

A member of the staff of the Center for International Studies at M.I.T., Prof. Rostow is a leading authority on the evolution of modern nations. He has done ex-tensive research and writing on economic and political develop-ments in the United States, Great Britain, Soviet Russia, and Communist China.

In a series of lectures given in major European cities in 1958-59, Prof. Rostow attracted great interest when he broached a "Non-Communist Manifesto."

These lectures were followed by eight others, delivered in Cambridge, in which he presented a new political theory to refute Marxist doctrine.

Author of many books on the economic and political growth of nations, Rostow recently completed a book on "The United States and the Diffusion of Power," a discussion of the evolution of American foreign and military policy since 1940 against the background of American values, institutions and history.

At the beginning of World At the beginning of World War II, Rostow served with the U.S. Department of State. Later, as a major in the U.S. Army, he worked with the British Air Ministry on problems of the German Air Force. From 1947 to 1949 he was Special Assistant to the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Europe. For his war work, Rostow was awarded the Legion of Merit and was named an honorary officer of the Order of the British Empire.

A native of New York City, Prof. Rostow was Harmsworth Profesor at Oxford University and Pitt Professor at Cambridge University before joining the M.I.T. faculty in 1950. A member of the Royal Economic Society in England, he is also a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Science.

UNH fans were present by the hundreds. Although they didn't have much to cheer about they displayed more loyalty than many UM fans who left campus Thursday and didn't return. The fans who did show up, though, were among the most exuberant and spirited of the year. Some of the most cheery fans were a group of men from Butterfield house. This same contingent—about 30 strong—sit beside the and during every grove and are band during every game and are among the most wholehearted supporters of the team. During

In the waning seconds of the game the group started to sing "When Twilight Shadows Deepen." They soon Shadows Deepen." They soon were joined by the Precisionettes and the rest of the crowd in a poignant tribute to the Redmen in their final home game.

Prof. Kendall To Speak Here On Richard III

Prof. Paul Murray Kendall, professor of English at Ohio University, will speak on "Ri-chard the Third in History and Literature" in a lecture to be given Wednesday, Nov. 16, at UMass.

Under sponsorship of the history department, the talks will serve as a preface to the Am-herst College production of Shakespeare's drama on the controversial English monarch. The Lecture will be given at 8 p.m. in Shattuck Auditorium of the Public Health Building. The play will open on Nov. 18.

Kendall's book on Richard III, published in 1955, is considered by many critics as the best biography yet written on the ruler. The Ohio scholar, a Guggenheim Fellow in 1957-58, is also author of Warwick the Kingmaker, published in 1957. He is now at work on a biography of another con-troversial fifteenth-century political figure, Louis XI of France. In addition he is co-editing (with Professor Vincent Ilardi, assistant professor of history at the UMass) a twenty-volume critical edition of dispatches of Milanese ambassadors at the courts of Louis XI and Charles the Bold.

Kendall's books have been ac-claimed both in the United States and abroad for their sound schol-arship, keen perception, and lively style.

THE STATE OF THE UNIVERSITY:

Student Responsibility Urged By Prof. Lewit

by JAMES R. REINHOLD '61 Assistant News Editor

Assistant News Editor

David William Lewit is assistant professor of psychology at UMass. He received his A.B. from Princeton University, M.A. from Stanford University, and the Ph.D. from the University of Minnesota.

"Original writing is the best sign of the level of advancement of a studen body", stated Prof. David W. Lewit. "One interesting aspect to the UMass campus is the lack of student publications here". He cited two main types of student writing: first, work of the nature of term papers and experimental laboratory reports; second, unsolicited writing addressed to the broader academic community.

"It would appear that there is less intellectual writing here than at other campuses, especially of the unsolicited student-financed sort."

at other campuses, especially of the unsolicited student-financed sort," stated Lewit. "The major reason for this, I think, is parochialism or provincialism. Undergraduates here are geographically too close to home and to old ideas and affections there." He feels that going home is often the "line of least resistance", and that sufficient numbers of out-of-staters in the UMass community could create a flowering of nurnoseful weekends on campus purposeful weekends on campus.

Advocates Broadening of Admission Policies '
Lewit stated he regards the University undergraduate population as being too homogeneous. "I would advocate the broadening of our admissions policies to make room for more out-of-state residents. For instance, one might work out a formula whereby for every Massachusetts native going to some other state university, we should consider accepting an out-of-stater here.

"A tradition of independent publications stimulates an intellectual 'private enterprise' system, resulting in more serious and more tual 'private enterprise' system, resulting in more serious and more responsible extra-curricular activity", stated Prof. Lewit.

Students Urged to Assume Greater Responsibilities

Lewit stated that students here should take more interest in activities leading to greater responsibilities. "Students should, for instance, be interested in the affairs of the town of Amherst. The fraternities and sororities pay taxes to the town; why don't their members establish official residence in Amherst and go to town meetings?"

"There is a limit to how much time one can spend in study. But one can dig out private faculty advisors and follow through with personally devised intellectual action. This packs more wallop than just another bull session.'

another bull session."

Lewit stated that students here are not being taught to become responsible citizens until they leave college. "There is evidence here of a planned prolongation of adolescence."

Campus Visitation Program Discussed

Lewit also discussed the current High School Visitation program and the Spring Open House system. "This is one area in which an entrenched notion without serious thought still persists, and which could be reconceived more fruitfully," he stated.

Instead of bringing high school pupils here, Lewit urges that college educators go to the high schools, and lecture there on their subjects. "Either a serious effort should be made, or none at all," he added, "and the circus-type of Open House should be ended." Presently many people enter college with "confirmed misconceptions" of the importance of personal relevance of the subject matter, he feels.

ently many people enter college with "confirmed misconceptions" on the importance of personal relevance of the subject matter, he feels.

Cites Opportunities for Future Advancement
Discussing the high points of the University, Lewit mentioned the current building program. "The facilities being erected make possible much that couldn't be tried before".

"We have a fine library building now, and have received a special appropriation for $100,000 to build up its collections. We could use, however, another $200,000 appropriation to bring the collections up to date."

"The potential of the student body here is good, especially with respect to their I.Q.'s. As the numbers here increase, the opportuni-ties increase for a variety of fine programs."

RD's Fall Production To Debut Tomorrow

The curtain goes up tomorrow night on the Roister Doisters' fall production of Thomas Wolfe's, "Look Homeward, An-gel", adapted by Ketti Frings, which is to be held in Bowker Anditorium Nov. 17, 18, and 19.

In the words of John McClain, reviewer for the N. Y. Journal American, "'Look Homeward, Angel' is, quite simply, one of the best evenings I've ever had in the theatre . . . it should remain a milestone in our time. Miss Frings has most ingeniously telescoped a few chapters from the scoped a few chapters from the novel into an overpowering con-sideration of a young man's escape from adolescence." When it was announced early in 1957 that Ketti Frings had succeeded in making a play out of Thomas Wolfe's novel, "Look Homeward, Angel", and that it would be brought to Broadway by one of the most eminent contem-porary producers, Kermit Bloom-garden, many theatrical observers were extremely skeptical about the results of the endeavor. It seemed to them an insurmountable task to fashion a play of any coherence and unity out of the long episodic book published in 1929. In it Thomas Wolfe wrote of his people, his town, and of his life, from birth until the time he left his "opulent and seductive South" for Harvard University and the years beyond. He was then nineteen and had completed his college approach to the search of the sear pleted his college course at the University at Chapel Hill.

In the more than 600 pages of this first novel of Wolfe's, cover ing the first nineteen years, there are 300 names, characters and an equally staggering number of identifiable places. No play, thought the wise ones, could attempt to encompass so many and much.

They were right. Wisely, Ketti Frings did not attempt to encompass the entire book, Instead, she combined the time period of the play to just a few weeks in 1916 when the boy Eugene Gant book) was seventeen years old.

Miss Frings' play concerned itself mainly with Eugene's attempt to tear himself away from the almost indissoluble embrace of his family, his desperate probing to try and understand the power of that embrace, and his first experience with romantic

When the play opened at the Ethel Barrymore Theatre on Thanksgiving night of 1957, starring Anthony Perkins, Jo Fleet, and Hugh Griffith, it was immediately and universally ap-parent how well Miss Frings had accomplished her purpose. Seldom accomplished her purpose. Seldom in theatrical history had there been more unanimity of critical approval for any play; and that approval was soon being echoed Something new, and definitely on the plus side, has been added to the fabulous Harlem Globetrotters of basketball, who play the Washington (D.C.) Generals in the headliner of a huge show at the Curry Hicks Cage on Fri-day Night, November 18, under the auspices of the UMass Alumni Association.

Also on the exciting program are Olson and Johnson's zany 'Hellzapoppin!" 40 minute madfest between halves of the game and competition between four international table tennis champions in a world championship tournament that will open the festivities at 8:00 p.m.

One of the most irritating problems we have on this campus is the telephone situa-

It is not a new problem. Seniors can remember when the 3-92 circuit was overloaded back in 1957. Last year the same thing happened with the 3-91 circuit—a busy signal before the last two digits were dialed.

The Student Senate has been very concerned with this problem, as well they should be. Every year they have petitioned the telephone company, and every year the company has given them the run-around. To show how much attention the telephone company has given the complaints, we point out that the two nearest dormitories, Hills and Johnson, have phones on these two aready overloaded exchanges.

Many students feel that there aren't enough phones in the dorms in the first place, but when we can't get past the first three digits during most of the evening as was the case last night, something has got to

When a public utility such as the telephone company completely disregards the interests and desires of the general public, the public has only one recourse—to register a formal complaint with the government agency which regulates that utility.

Therefore, while such action may be considered quite harsh, we strongly urge the Buildings and Grounds Committee of the Student Senate to issue a formal complaint to the Federal Communications Commission.

KENNEDY FACES INTERNATIONAL PROBLEMS

by MICHAEL PALTER '63

The first Alumni Memorial lecture on Monday night was received by an enthusiastic audience. The speaker was Dr. W. W. Rostow, Professor of Economic History at M.I.T.; his topic, "America's International Prospects Under a New President." Dr. Rostow's principal thesis was that "if we are to make history in the 1960's... not merely react to it... We must understand the historical environment that confronts us."

Dr. Rostow approached his problem by first making an "objective" analysis of change in the key regions of the globe: the Communist bloc, Western Europe, and the underdeveloped areas of Asia, the Middle East, Africa, and Latin America.

THE COMMUNIST BLOC

Dr. Rostow enumerated the various socio-economic and political changes in the Soviet Union. He mentioned the high growth rate of the Soviet Union and stressed the fact that although their gross national product is less than half our own, the Soviets are making more efficient use of this G.N.P. in areas of consumption, investment, and the pursuit of power on the world scene.

The Soviet people, bound together by a "pervasive national , exhibit an ever increasing desire for the expansion of "eco nomic welfare . . . food, housing, and the gadgetry of an industrial civilization. In fact, there is, among some, a willingness to modify old ideological formulae in the light of changing reality."

EASTERN EUROPE

"Eastern Europe," said Dr. Rostow, "is caught up in a peculiar protracted kind of occupation." The people live in drab settings looking toward Moscow for guidance. The objective of Soviet policy is to inflict apathy upon the people of Eastern Europe. Yet, these people "have administered a striking defeat to Communist ideological pretensions", remaining loyal to their nationhood, religion, and freedom.

WESTERN EUROPE AND JAPAN

Following reconstruction, the Western European economics ex-perienced a phase of growth similar to our own 1920 phase. Along with increasing levels of consumption, a higher sophistication has been effected in the production of "strip steel, light engineering, plastics, and electronics." This new industrial competence of Western Europe has been the "root cause of our balance of payment difficul-

UNDERDEVELOPED AREAS

Dr. Rostow expressed the opinion that time will inevitably endow such countries as India and China with atomic capacities. These peoples are now in a period of economic and social transition which every nation must traverse. The redistribution of power and influence which will be by-products of this economic and social growth will play a significant part in future events.

DIFFUSION OF POWER

The consequent diffusion of power inherent in those changes will necessitate economic, diplomatic, and psychological instruments of competition rather than the risky military aspects, said Dr. Rostow. Thus Dr. Rostow foresees increasingly intensive US-USSR discussions on arms control, because of the obvious consequences of a diffusion of power.

LEADERSHIP

Dr. Rostow went on to say that it would be the task of the U.S. to guide the world in the true Democratic tradition. He warned against being "a garrison state, a kind of rich man on the hill surrounded by hostile totalitarian states.

COMMUNIST THREAT TO UNDERDEVELOPED AREAS

It is the task of the U.S., said Dr. Rostow, to see that the under-It is the task of the U.S., said Dr. Rostow, to see that the under-developed nations evolve in forms which leave open the possibility of their development as modern Democratic Societies. At present, the U.S. has not been granting sufficient aid to these nations. An effi-cient system of aid is necessary, said Dr. Rostow, to countervail the ideological consequences of poor nations.

To wage an effective cold war at the present time, it will be necessary, said Dr. Rostow, to mold the nations of Western Europe into a cohesive force, responsible to each other. This would head off the follies of unilateral action by each of the Western European Nations. But what is to be the action of the United States in this ideological struggle?

WHAT TO DO

First, said Dr. Rostow, a larger federal budget is needed. Yet, money is not enough. "We need ideas, technical innovations, human insight, and simply, first rate men. Of course, money is necessary to build and give adequate mobility to our conventional forces designed to deter limited war. We must bring the development loan fund to about $1.5 billion per year on a long term basis."

Speaking on a larger plane, Dr. Rostow affirmed the need of an enlarged and coordinated free world effort. We must forge a closer unity between the richer and poorer nations of the world. In these steps we should constantly strive to effect a situation wherein foreign aggression would be irrational.

Dr. Rostow espoused the philosophy of peace through strength. Yet he went on to speak of the shallow properties of our proposals on disarmament. He said that "our proposals have been piecemeal", although sincere. In connection with this, he mentioned the appointment of special assistant for arms control staff work and negotiations by President-Elect Kennedy.

In the future, we will win no automatic success; no results with-proportionate American effort. Of President-Elect Kennedy, Dr. out proportionate American effort. Of President-Elect Kennedy, Dr. Rostow said that it would be his duty to stir our nation, create new partnerships with underdeveloped areas, giving new life to our bonds with our allies, and "perswading the Communist world that the weareness which everyledges our lives must be brought under interprepons which overshadow our lives must be brought under interna-tional discipline and control."

In discussing the possibility of a first performance of a new composition of the stature of a symphony, he pointed out many of the problems and drawbacks which confront young American composers. It is very difficult, in the first place, to find an orchestra which will perform a first work; and when an orchestra does accept it, another performance of the same work is very unlikely. Young composers are hard pressed for public presentation of their work and find that to gain recognition is a long, difficult struggle against many able artists.

Our question is this: why were these places closed? Classes were held on Saturday, November 12. School was officially in session. Since students were expected to be in class on Saturday or suffer disciplinary action, it was unfeasible and unique the content of the content disciplinary action, it was unfeasible and un-economical for several students to go home during this three day period. HOW TO BEAT THE BEAT GENERATION

My cousin Herkie Nylet is a sturdy lad of nineteen summers e all believed until recently, a lively intelligence and an assured future. Herkie's father, Walter O. Last year he sent Herkie to the Maryland College of Humanities, Sciences, and Artificial Cherries, and he intended, upon Herkie's graduation, to find him a nice fat wife and take him into the firm as

Could a young man have more pleasing prospects? Of course But a couple of months ago, to everyone's consternation, Herkie announced that he was not going into the artificial cherry business. Nor was he going to stay in college. "I am," said Herkie, "a member of the Beat Generation. I am going to San Francisco and grow a beard." Nor was he going to stay in college. "I am," said

Well sir, you can imagine the commotion in the family when Herkie went traipsing off to San Francisco! Uncle Walter would have gone after him and dragged him home, but unfortunately he was right in the middle of the artificial cherry season. Aunt Thelma couldn't go either because of her old leg trouble. (One of her legs is older than the other.)

So I went. I searched San Francisco for weeks before I found Herkie living under the counter of a Pronto Pup stand. "Herkie, how are you?" I cried, looking distraughtly upon his tangled beard, his corduroy jacket, his stricken eyes.

Beat," said Herkie

I offered him a Marlboro and felt instantly better when he took it because when one smokes Marlboros, one cannot be too far removed from the world. One still has, so to speak, a hold on the finer things of life—like good tobacco, like easy-drawing filtration, like settling back and getting comfortable and enjoying a full-flavored smoke. One is, despite all appearances, basically happiness-oriented, fulfillment-directed, pleasure-prone.

"Herkie, what are you doing with yourself?" I asked.

"I am finding myself," he replied. "I am writing a novel in the sand with a pointed stick. I am composing a fugue for clavier and police whistle. I am sculpting in experimental materials-like English muffins.

And what do you do for fun?" I asked.

"Come," he said and took me to a dank little night club where men in beards and women in basic burlap sat on orange crates and drank espresso. On a tiny stage stood a poet reciting a free-form work of his own composition entitled Exeema: The Story of a Boy while behind him a jazz trio played 200 choruses Tin Roof Blues.
"Herkie," said I, "come home with me to the artificial cherries."

said Herkie, so sadly I went home to tell Uncle Walter the bad news. He was less distressed than I had feared. It seems Uncle Walter has another son, a quiet boy named Edvorts, about whom he had completely forgotten, and today Edvorts is in business with Uncle Walter and Herkie is beat in San Francisco, and everyone is happy.

And you too will be happy—with Marlboros, or if you prefer an unfiltered smoke, with Philip Morris. Try the brand-new Philip Morris king-size Commander—long, mild, and leis-urely. Have a Commander—welcome aboard!

The Senator by RAY WILSON '64

At 7 p.m. every Wednesday, in the Council Chambers of the Stu-dent Union, Dennis Twohig, President of the Student Senate, brings down his gavel to open another meeting of the supreme body of the Student Government. Reports are submitted; bills are presented; some are passed— some defeated. At about 9:30 the gavel sounds again and the Sena-tors leave. An article appears on the front page of Friday's Col-legian, relating the details of the meeting ... And that is all that most students ever hear of the Student Senate.

However, much of the work, perhaps a major portion of it, is accomplished, not at the Wednes-day meeting, but behind the scenes, at committee meetings, conferences between Senators and school officials, and at other meetings of which the average student seldom hears.

Complete coverage of these Complete coverage of these activities would mean making available to the students, the complete reports of the various committees. This, of course, would require more news-space than the Collegian has available. Therefore, in an effort to keep the students informed of those particular areas of Senate activity with which they are most concerned, the Public Relations Committee of the Senate has Committee of the Senate initiated this column.

Logically, the students themselves should have the opportunity to select those areas, and are therefore invited to write in all questions. questions, suggestions, and complaints. It is the committee's sin cere hope that the major portion of this column can be devoted to the answering of students' letters. English, German Spoken In Test Teaching Plan

BERLIN (UPI) — West Germany's first official bilingual classes at the early grade level are underway at the Muchlenau school in the Berlin suburb of Zehlendorf.

Bilingual German instructors teach classes of 30 students under a plan sponsored by West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt and the U.S. Commandant, Maj. Gen. Ralph M. Osborne.

A Berlin school official first suggested the idea, and Dr. George Clark, former cultural officer at the U.S. Mission in Berlin gave it strong support.

The committees drew up the plan by which two classes of children, half American and half German, take the preparatory

During the preparatory course, the teachers will give each lesson twice, once in each language.

"We know of no other schools which have done something like this," said Zehlendorf school su-pervisor Richard Annert.

The chairman of the American school committee, Earle Cleve-land, agreed that the language difficulty would not retard the students.

"Many of the American chilmany of the American chi-dren already know some German, some of them quite well," he said. "Some already have attend-ed German schools."

He said it was too early to say how far the bilingual school sys-tem might develop. He doubted that it could be started in the up-per grades because "older children don't learn languages so easily."

Cleveland said he was convinced that after the preparatory course the children would be "fully prepared to do bilingual work"

The American students will come mainly from the families of members of the military and diplomatic missions here.

Foreign Junior Executives Attend 6 Weeks Of Classes

by ROGER GRUFF '64

One of the lesser known under-takings at UMass is the Junior attendance in the second of a series of J.E.T. programs. The participants study the principles and techniques employed by American managements in the making of business decisions.

J.E.T. is under the sponsorship of the Experiment of Internation-al Living, located in Putney, Vermont, and is conducted by the School of Business Administra-tion here at the University.

Arrangement of the Program
The academic instruction involves 90 hours of classes over a six week period. The program includes courses in orientation, economics, and management. Also included are courses in marketing, production management, and managerial statistics.

In addition to the regularly scheduled J.E.T. class instruction, all students in the program are invited and encouraged to attend other classes of the University in their fields of particular inter-est. They also attend a number of afternoon and evening nars which are conducted by guest representatives from in-dustry and the faculty of the School of Business Administra-

Senate Votes Tax Support For Judgers

A unanimous vote of the Student Senate brought the Univer-sity Judging Team back under the Student Tax fund Wednesday evening. The team, which had been labeled a "special interest group" last spring during consi-deration of the budgets, had had its budget cut from the tax.

Senator Andy D'Avanzo pointed out that no longer was the team a special interest group, as membership was not restricted. He went on to say that there are many similarities in structure and function between the Judging Team and the University Debat-

Team and the University Debating Team, whose budget is under the Student Tax, and which has never been questioned as to "special interest".

Senator Vincent DellaPenna '64, in discussion of the Student Program initiated by S35 for a Distinguished Visitors' Fund, brought out an important point concerning the choosing of varicipate in the program, he said, suggestions for speakers, lecturers, and other university guests should come from the students themselves. He urged that dents themselves. He urged that the student body get into contact with their senators in order to suggestions pertaining the Program.

An appropriation of $400 was to cover costs incurred by the expansion of that organization.

New Look At Holidays

The Student Senate Wednesday night unanimously passed a motion that re-raises the question of holidays which fall during the middle of the week. The announcement three weeks ago that classes, beginning in September, 1961, would be held on these holidays inspired a response from a group of students "vociferous minority." Since these first protests, there have been no reactionary undercurrents that give any inkling that a large segment of the campus is against this administrative move.

The Senate's bill is recommendation to the Scheduling and Registration Board that it "reconsider the decision to abolish weekday holidays . . ." It further recommends that a representative of the student body be present at this meeting.

This whole issue is underscored by the Chairman of the Board, Mr. Arthur R. Williams, in his memorandum of November 8 which is addressed to the Board and two senators. In this letter Mr. Williams set forth two points that were of concern to the Board:

- How many students want the holidays back? For the calendars to be re-considered, it stated, "all concerned would have to be assured that a very substantial portion of the student body desired such a move.'
- The suggestion of Senator Trudeau that a student be on the Schedule and Registration Board will be considered at the following meeting. Also to be considered is the suggestion that a long weekend be "incorporated into the February-March run." (This, the memorandum continues, "in its turn, requires a consideration of the gaining-back of Counseling Days for classes.")

After weighing the pros and cons of classes on holidays, the Collegian has concluded that these middle-of-the-week vacations have no reason for being. We are convinced that they are not meaningful to the student whose flow and continuity in focused study is broken up by the vacation days. Nor is it meaningful or of any value to the University, which—institutionally speaking—has nothing to gain by the break.

As obvious as it may seem, we are here to get the most out of the educational system that is laid before us. It is our purpose as serious students to exploit this time to the fullest, to obtain the most benefits.

We realize that these holiday breaks have always offered a convenient respite—a chance to catch up with studies or a chance to relax. Nonetheless, we support the Student Senate in the belief that the extra days that would be added to the academic year by the loss of holidays are of value and significance to the University students. We certainly feel that these days would most effectively be put to use by increasing the reading period and/or period for final exams.

THE PLAY

THE PLAY

by JUDY NOREN '63

The turbulent family of one of America's most brilliant writers, Thomas Wolfe, is being brought to life onstage this weekend at Bowker Auditorium as Ketti Frings' Pulitzer Prize play, "Look Homeward, Angel", has its local premiere at the University.

When the famous novel on which the Broadway smash hit is based was first published some three decades ago, Thomas Wolfe recorded in correspondence to friends "the strange and wonderful results that the book has wrought."

From Asheville, Wolfe's birthplace and the thinly-disguised "Altamount" of the novel, one irate old lady wrote to say: "Yore pore mother took to her bed with shock. If, you ever return, we'll drag your overgroan karkus (sic!) across the town square."

Nor did Wolfe's immediate family react much more generously to the intimate revelations of their innermost lives which the novelist recorded in his book. Their letters to Wolfe following its publication were either cold or explicitly resentful in tone, and Wolfe finally decided with the strange of the cold were either cold or explicitly resentful in tone, and Wolfe finally decided ruefully that "You Can't Go Home Again," the title of another is successful novels.

But perhaps the "most wonderful result" of all was that this towering work was to bring Thomas Wolfe's name to a Broadway that spurned him while he was alive. Nineteen years after his death, Ketti Frings' adaptation of "Look Homeward, Angel" would be hailed as "a milestone of drama in our time." At the New York premiere, the overwhelming emotional impact of the stage production electrified the audience, and even those who had come to carp agreed that Thomas Wolfe would undoubtedly have loved Present in the audience that evening were three members of Wolfe's family who had travelled from Asheville to see who had travelled from Asheville to see the play that portrayed all three of them. Mabel Wolfe Wheaton, of whom her brother wrote, "She has more human greatness in her than any woman I've known," has been Wolfe's unofficial historian for years. Mabel—the Helen of the play — explained afterwards: "I went in fear of what I might see or that the audience might titter." She watched with a critical eye, and although many inti-mate and sometimes painful details of her family life were uncovered, she had her family life were uncovered, she had little fault to find. She praised the true-to-life portraits of her mother and father, and admired the playwright's conception of her brother Tom.

Fred Wolfe—the Luke of the play—on the whole shared his sister's views. But after the performance, he visited actor Storch backstage at the Ethel Barrymore Theatre.

"I like your portrayal," he said. "But

"Well," Storch replied, "we tried it at rehearsals, but found it doesn't work on the stage—too distracting."

"That's where you're making a big mistake, son", Fred grinned. "Stammering's been my stock-in-trade for the past fifty years, and take it from me, it does w-w-work!"

THE SHOW REVIEWED

by JUDITH ST, JEAN '61 Look Homeward Angel Look Homeward Angel, produced by the Roister Doisters and directed by Mr. Arthur E. Niedeck, has many brilliant moments. In discussing this production, it is to be stressed that it was basically a student co-operative without the usual professional dener or technical assistance. Returning to direct Roister Doister play after many years absence, Niedeck has taken an excellent play—at the same time, a play that presented many interpretive

The play itself is carefully thought out and organized to build characters and mood until the denouement, capturing the essence of the author's philosophy: "the world is you." In many ways, the play is depressing because the characters are caught in a situation which has either been self-created or thrust upon them; yet, the characters cannot or will not escape. The intricacy of presenting this play is not so much in the plot, but in the characterization and prevailing mood of the Gants' world.

Mr. Gant, played by Paul Cwiklik, is tortured and twisted by the life he is forced to live with his shrewish wife Eliza. Paul Cwiklik was excellent, he was thoroughly believable and often displayed, in the character of his 60 year old, degraded and fallen man, great acting talent. In the first scene, which had become somewhat tedious, he entered in a drunken state that helped develop the characteriza-tions of the other actors in relation to this man.

The drunk scene was well acted and introduced by an excellent supporting actor, Francis Droam as Dr. McGuire, The part was very small yet when he entered his scene, he commanded the view attention. Eliza Gant portrayed by Jayne Hay-den with all the shrewish qualities that make this woman despicable. Jayne talked fast and long to create a thoroughly re-alistic character which would eligit the hate and would elicit the hate and tive boy. The blocking of many of his scenes was good, keeping him away from the central action to indicate that he was withdrawn and lived within himself. His mannerisms and way of walking helped to build the character although his accent and manner of speaking were often disconcerting.

Ben Gant, the older brother, was played by Miles Thompson, who had many good moments, but didn't quite achieve the desired combination of harshness mixed with love. Many of the lines were read and not acted. Gant's relation with Mrs. Pert was not clearly acted. Gant's relation with Mrs. Pert was not clearly put across. However, he did very well in his death scene and in his preceding scenes which pointed to his impending death. In the last scene his voice, which was the voice of his being in the afterworld, was very well done, and added to the mystery and wonder of Eugene's awakening to life.

Laura James, a sweet and innocent girl swept into a beautiful love relationship with Eugene, was played by Janice Dovner. She was poignant and credulous in part, but she did weaken in her final scene with Eliza.

Among the supporting characters, several were excellent. Thea Brown created a real character as Miss Brown, Sandra Segal was a charming Madame Elizabeth, and the house guests of the Dixieland boarding house were good. Mrs. "Fatty" Pert, Linda Lane, was not believable as the soft, understanding woman friend of Ben, and Helen Gant Barton, played by Honour-Marie Campbell, did not often create a living person. living person

A very interesting effect was created when half of the main set revolved revealing a raised when half of the main set revolved revealing a raised set of an interior bedroom scene. The set for act II was unimaginative. It was the exterior of Mr. Gant's stone cutting shop. The lighting was designed to set the depressing mood of the play, but often was dark creating an effect of mood by varying shades of light and dark. There were several good moments; for example, the scene in which a single focus of light comes as Eugene falls to his knees to offer a prayer to God for his brother Ben. This was a dramatic moment captured by the actor and the lightling effect.

Women in rural areas obtain this handy sewing fabric when they buy feed, flour, and other products packaged in cotton. City girls often can buy the empty sacks from suburban feed cealers.

If the word "sack" conjures visions of a drab, tentlike gar-ment, it's time for a little re-education. Today, biscuit mixings and chicken feed come garbed in exotic floral prints, neat pin stripes, demure checks, bold plaids, and many other patterns designed by leading textile artists. And modern sacks have the traditional iners, comfort, and wearability of all cotton fabrics.

Besides its economy, cotton bag Besides its economy, conton one sewing offers another opportu-nity that any talented seam-stress welcomes—the challenge of transforming prosaic sacks into transforming prosaic sacks i smart, individualized apparel.

It's simple to prepare sacks for sewing. Just turn them wrong side out, clip the inside seams, unravel the threads, and remove brand names with warm, soapy water. Dry and press the fabric, and you're ready to sew!

Since only three or four matching 100-lb, bags are needed for a full-skirted summer frock, you won't have to save a huge stack of sacks for a weekend's worth of apparel. The National Cotton Council suggests the following selection. Council suggests the following selection for a varied three-day

JACK SAVED HIS COMPANY $10,000 ON HIS FIRST ASSIGNMENT

While Jack Trabert was in college he had some definite career ideas. He knew what he wanted—a job with a payoff for good judgment

With a B.S. in Business Administration from the University of Nebraska, Jack knew he could look in many directions. And he did. He talked to 20 companies. And then in August, 1957, joined Northwestern Bell, in Omaha, Nebraska.

His chance to show what he could do was not long in coming. On his first assignment Jack came up with answers that made it possible to handle long distance calls made at night in the Omaha area with less force and equipment than was needed under the old system. This resulted in a $10,000 annual saving.

Next, Jack worked on a training and development program for "mark sensing"—a new method for mechanized processing of long distance charges.

Today, Jack has an important role in planning and developing telephone facilities to keep pace with Omaha's ever-increasing need for long distance services.

Jack puts it this way-"If a guy can keep his average up, there are places to go in this outfit. A man doesn't have to wait around for opportunity to knock—he has all he can handle right from the start."

If you want a job in which you're given a chance to show your stuff, and held strictly accountable for your decisions, right from the start-then you'll want to visit your Placement Office for literature and additional information.

"Our number one aim is to have in all management jobs the most vital, intelligent, positive and imaginative men ve can possibly find."

This contest was the faculty section final and was a repeat of last year's final. Both these men provide stiff competition for the varsity ten-nis team and train with them in the spring.

In the semi-finals Bossart defeated Bob Roland 6-1, 6-3. Roland made a fine showing but Bossart had too much class.

In the other half of the draw,
Ken Barrows defeated Ted Stewart 6-2, 6-3 and Everett Sherman in the semi-finals 6-4, 6-2. Although Stewart and Sherman lost they displayed excellent capabilities

The finals between Bossart and Barrows promise to be a highly interesting and skillfully played contest since both men are former college varsity players. Bossart played at Harvard.

Coach Studley has come to us from the Big Ten campus of Illinois, and in his first year at the UMass helm was converted the team from a sloppy 3-5-1 squad to a co-champion of the

SPORTSENSE

The Redmen's best season in 28 years will be in the balance when they meet the maroons from Springfield, Saturday. After last week's game with UNH it would seem that Coach Studley's crew seem that Coach Studley's crew will have little trouble defeating the 2-5-1 Springfield squad. But it isn't as easy as all that. Tomorrow's game will be, to say the least, an anticlimax to a great season. It is quite probable, as Coach Studley has testified, that the Mass squad's drive, which was so much in evidence against the Wildcats, will be lost in a fog of glory.

The men deserve that glory, but let's hope that they can forget it for a while, or at least fight to maintain it, tomorrow. The squad's recent performance at Alumni Field has clearly showed that UMass has the kind of team it's been looking for these many years, and the kind of coaches that can make and train a winning club.

Sophomore Ken Kezer, fresh from Coach Dick MacPherson's frosh squad, submitted the great-est performance last week as he filled in for injured Sam Lussier, and will be heavily counted on in tomorrow's clash. But it's hard to tomorrow's clash. But it's hard to pick out just one player from the beanpot victory game. Everyone in both offensive and defensive action did his job well, clinching a tie for the crown, and hinting that next year's squad will be as good or better than this year's champs.

The Redmen have five starting sophomores and a junior quarter-back who's considered one of the best in New England. This factor, with the strong freshman team, should provide another successful ball club next year.

The Boston University Terriers should be a favorite over the U. of Buffalo, tomorrow. Halfback Dick Desmarais, who played such a vital role in B.U.'s defeat of UMass, will be out to grab the all-time scoring record. He's 125 yards behind Bob Whalen's record of 711 yards, and should have a good chance to surpass it if he plays up to his par. (He carried plays up to his par. (He carried 30 times for 146 yards against UMass.)

New Hampshire's senior end, Dick Eustis, has followed in his father's footsteps in rewriting the Wildcats' record book. Dick accounted for 26 pass receptions in seven games for UNH, hauling in the final one in the closHis father, also named Dick, had set a scoring record of 26 TD's in three years from 1929-'31.

The big game in the Ivy League will be the Harvard-Yale clash. It looks as if Yale should have little trouble defeating the Johnnies, but there is still speculation as to an upset. The latest word is that quarterback Charlie Rayrold will not be easily. Charlie Ravenel will not be ready Charlie Ravenel will not be ready for the game (and Harvard will need him), but you never know. If the men from Cambridge comanage to upset Yale, it will be a vital blow to the Elis. They've eight straight victories going for them, after having defeated Princeton, but that was Princeton's only loss. Thus a Yale defeat tomorrow could mean a tie feat tomorrow could mean a tie for the Ivy Crown.

As soon as the football season has ended, Coach Matt Zunic will has ended, Coach Matt Zunic will be leading his basketball squad through its toughest schedule in UMass history. The team has been practicing since early No-vember, and will see their first action in a two-day tourney at Kent State, It looks like a good year for the UMass court jesters.

Reverend Greene Relates Prison Camp Experiences

Reverend Robert Greene, a Maryknoll mission priest, sta-tioned in China, spoke to the Newman Club, Tuesday evening on his experiences in a Communist prison camp. For two and a half years, the Reverend endured Communist persecution in the Southeast province of China. This is the Father's story.

Shortly after the last war, the Church in China had acquired many converts, largely through the dedicated work of the Maryknoll mission priests. In the far north of China, however, the Communists had formed fifthcolumns, an organized army, and a Youth Corps which followed the army. The Communists would form instruction in Communist propaganda in the village school.
Teachers would be sent into the Teachers would be sent into the village to spread the propaganda. When the village politics was in a state of confusion, the Communists would dishonor and kill priests, converting the Churches into prisons and warehouses. When the daily use of the Sacraments had vanished, a people's ments had vanished, a people's court would be established to court would be established to execute those persons who would not conform to the new terrorist government. The army would then invade the village to erect a police state. Finally the Youth Corps spread the religion of hate to all villagers.

A method used by the Party to discredit the beneficial work of the Church was to keep one priest in solitary confinement for a long enough period of time to brain-wash. He would then be exhibited as an example of a priest who saw the light, confessing his sins, denouncing the evils of his Church, and praising the virtues of the Postry of the Party.

In these days when the pews were being ripped out of the Churches, when friends con-demned friends to death in public executions, the Sacrifice of the Mass was the only aid. When the Communists invaded the Father's Communists invaded the Father's village, he was thrown into a filthy cell. Once he was dragged before a firing squad, only to be hauled back to his cell. Flanders Commences New Lecture Series

by GERALD B. KAGAN '64

Public Affairs at UMass, gave the first of four lectures on "The Moral Law and the Modern World" on Thursday, Nov. 17, 1960 in the Plymouth Room of the S.U. Thursday's lecture was entitled "The Nature and Scope of Moral Law", and was basically concerned with the requirements of the moral law.

Moral Law Requirements

Senator Flanders discussed the five major requirements of the moral law. The first of these is honesty. Honesty has been said to have much practical value. "Lying", says Flanders, "is used to gain an unfair advantage over another person, and it can back another person, and it can back-fire as it did in the U2 incident, when the 'cloak and dagger' was used instead of direct honesty."

"Compassion for people must "Compassion for people must be an intelligent one not just one of sympathy," says Flanders. "True understanding of people is the important thing."

Another requirement of the oral law, and one which our diplomacy has failed in more than any other, is humility. Humility is often shown by the primitive aborigines of Australia, but is lacking in our nation. "Humility is not impossible," says the former senator, "and the scientists are the people who have kept their humility through the many years of scientific advance." The

Moral Obligations

"The moral law is completely independent of divine revelation and divine authority," said Flanders. "It has ruled human affairs since men became men, elevating them from mere ani-mals. What we do with physical devices which follow physical laws in being built, is moral. The atom bomb, for instance, was built by physical laws, but the decision to drop it on masses of people was moral.

The moral law requires us to love people, but not to love cieties like the K.K.K. or Soviet Government in which peo ple are grouped. It is necessary for us to act in opposition to the Soviet Government, but the peo-ple are our brothers," according ple are our brothers," to the ex-senator.

Heavy Pressure

Senate Majority Leader Mau-Donahue, D-Holyoke, rice A. Donahue, D-Holyoke, fought gamely to save the $14,-000,000 recommendation of Gov. Furcolo. State senators have reported the heaviest sort of pressure has been put on by the gov-ernor's office for the medical school proposal.

"This matter has been studied too much," said Donahue. "It is an ideal way to utilize the Shat-tuck Hospital, which has not re-alized its full potential, for the training of young doctors.

"No matter how you figure it out, it will be 10 years before the first graduate begins to practice," Sen. Ralph C. Mahar, R. Orange, said, counting four years to start the school, four for training and two of internship. He said waiting until next year, only weeks away, would be time enough.

Senate Ways and Means Chairman William D. Fleming, D-Worcester, said the Donahueamendment would not require plans before June of 1962 and that certainly indicates no hurry. He said, "We know this will cost more than $14.000.000 from cost more than $14,000,000 from the state and another $3,000,000 from the federal government."

He noted that the state has already approved sums for 70 Massachusetts students amounting to $2500 each to attend the University of Vermont medical school in Burlington. He said the state also is aiding a few stu-dents at Yale, also under the New England regional compact.

Korean Art Exhibit ...About To Close

The current exhibition of color photography, which has been on display in the Commonwealth Room for the past two weeks, has been one of the finest hung so far this year

This collection of 63 color photographs of the Korean monuments of architecture and sculpture merits special distinction since it is the first time that these Korean monuments have been photographed in color. The pictures taken by the U.S. Army, the American Embassy in Seoul, and the National Gallery of Art opened in its first showing a year and a half ago at the Department of State. Since then the collection has been on a worldwide tour to exhibit many of the art pieces and national treasures of Korea.

The exhibition supplements a nation-wide cour of Korean masterpieces of art one and a half years ago. Secretary of State Christian A. Herter has described it as "a direct result of the concern of the United States Government for the protection of the Korean national treasures during the Korean hostilities."

Every photograph of the collection certainly catches the highlights of the Korean culture, spanning the Three Kingdoms and Three Dynasties of Korea from the sixth and seventh centuries to modern times. The beauties of the architecture and of the works of art and statuary in their subtle patinas are reflected in all their grandeur. It is so outstanding that we hope that everyone will have taken a moment out before the 24th

riday night I felt this gnawing sensation

A few weeks ago on a Friday night I felt this gnawing sensation within myself to go out on the town and have a big fling. The after effects the next day might not feel too well but that night I was going to live it up. So off to Springfield I went to see "Ben-Hur."

Immediately you think, "They say that picture is wonderful... Look at all the awards it received!" Believe me, Randolph Scott westerns are a lot easier on the stomach. The movie is billed as "a tale of the Christ." You've got to admit from a critic's standpoint... that particular type of plot is really overworked. I mean ... everyone knows the ending... or it could be the beginning depending on your belief. Nevertheless, Director Willie Wyler has several dozen "blood" scenes which are pretty nauseating most of the time. There's this chariot scene where the villain is chewed to pieces and everyone in the theater is gasping and appalled over the sight of so much blood. The women start to cry, and begin to faint in the aisles. For the showing of this picture and only this picture, all fainting women are carring of this picture and only this picture, all fainting women are carried from their seats to the back of the theater in a true, honest-to-goodness, live chariot (in 1961, featuring the brand new "performability"). So you've got these chariots running up and down the aisles and to tell the truth . . . it more or less detracts from the screen play.

Well, all during the show up to the chariot scene, I had been chewing on a rough such on my finercrail (wetch the seater).

Well, all during the show up to the chariot scene, I had been chewing on a rough spot on my fingernail (watch the psych department have me in for tests next week). Just as the movie progressed to the chariot scene, I bit off too much nail and the finger started to bleed. At first I didn't notice it (being fascinated as I was with the mangled and mauled body of Stephen Boyd lying prostrate on the giant silver screen before me) but all of a sudden the little old lady beside me spots the "living color" on my hand, starts to gag, reaches for her handkerchief. handkerchief.

Alright, now I'm excited . . . not because I see I'm bleeding to death . . . but because I see that that grey haired old lady has run off and left her transistor radio and pack of Dentine gum. Now I too can have my own transy like the rest of the kids in the drugstore. But first, I had to see if it worked . . so I turned it on. By now, the blood from my finger was really flowing (must have cut something big . . like a DPN or an RNA—no! not a chloroplast) and was dripping all over my John Thomas "high bouncing" sneakers and Frankie Avalon sweater. Meanwhile, the scene on the screen switched to the Crucifixion. Aside from the religious significance of this spectacle, I think Wyler disgusted his audience with the amount of "blood" footage he put on the screen (and they have the nerve to call Lenny Bruce) put on the screen (and they have the nerve to call Lenny Bruce "sick"). He even had footage of the rain washing to blood down the sides of Calvary. In the meantime, I just had to stop my finger from bleeding so I stood up and asked aloud, "Does anyone here have a band-aid?"

Well, you'd think I said a dirty word! Two guys stood up and yelled something at me, then a wise guy threw a nail, a lady threw a comb, and one fella up front threw a spear. If only someone had thrown a battery for my new found transistor.

By this time everyone in the place was complaining about the noise, so the manager came over, grabbed me by my Sal Mimeo rumble belt and then threw me out the door.

Back to Amherst I trudged with my Blackhawk comic book under my arm . . . bleeding from a ruptured DPN or RNA.

The Army, according to Secretary of the Army Brucker, needs 14,000 new lieutenants from ROTC annually. It has been unable to meet this need, as is pointed out, commissioning only 12,500. The Army has found that a college going from a required program to a voluntary program loses 50 to 60% of commissionees. Ipso facto—the army supports required ROTC.

The Air Force, on the other hand, has a much smaller requirement, about 3,200 which it can meet with voluntary programs.

Now, the Provost has stated that if it were considered that ROTC were solely recruitment for the military, to procure a given number of officers, that the University would question its historic and traditional policies in regard to ROTC. He believes that ROTC, the basic program is a part of the university education to which the young men are entitled. It includes character development, and citizenship training which might not otherwise be obtained. A Review Of Richard III

by JUDY ST. JEAN

The Masquers of Amherst College presented a brilliant performance of William Shakespeare's Richard III, directed by Walter Boughton. The play is centered around Richard's Machiavellian methods to seize the throne of England. To achieve his goal, he is forced to commit many heirance seize in the second of is forced to commit many heinous crimes which ake his attainment of the throne a poor victory make his attainment of the throne a poor victory and finally lead him to a bloody death. Although the plot is steeped in murder and centers around a amind warped with evil and hate, the interpretation is made delightful since Richard, played by Bret Prentiss, reveals a comic way of looking at himself and at others, and points up the folly of men who are taken in by evil when it is presented with a coating of virtue. Richard was physically and mentally de-formed; dogs barked at him as he passed; he ra-diated evil. Because he had been spurned all his life, he had to capture the world, and Brett Prentiss has Richard laughing at the world for its stupidity until Richard laughing at the world for its stupidity until he is forced to see that the evil that men do leads to their destruction. Prentiss created a sparkling character with an intense energy which never larged. His manner of speaking was clear, curt and precise, and his physical movements were always characteristic, especially his facial expressions. At times he became an atrocious scene-stealer, but times, he became an atrocious scene-stealer, this was Richard.

Foster Stewart, playing the Duke of Bucking-ham, also created an exciting character. The Duke was the malicious accomplice of Richard, yet, he too laughed at his fellow-men in such a way as to elicit pity at his death. The scene in which Buckingham plays interlocutor between the townspeople, who are feebly clammering for Richard to be king, and the falsely pious Richard, was done extremely well.

George, Duke of Gloucester, played by Philip Gossett, although a small part, was effectively portrayed. Many of the other men in the cast were not believable and did not become integral parts of the situations. Philip Rand and Paul Obre, playing Lord Hastings and Henry Tudor, were more like all-American boys than Shakespearean characters. Frosh Harriers Are 'Best Ever' To Cobb

by AL COHEN '63
Undefeated and Champions, the Saturday UMass freshman cross country harriers have been cited as "the best frosh team I've ever had,"

by Coach Justin L. Cobb.

The Cobbmen improved steadily as they gained victories over Northeastern, B.U., UConn, Harvard, Springfield, Amherst, and New Hampshire. They were impressive in winning the New Englands in Boston with an outstanding team effort. Their sixth place finish against stiff compe-tition in the IC4A Nationals at New York proved their New England's crown was deserved.

All through the season it was the consistent winning efforts of Gene Colbern, Bob Brouillet, and Jim McDermott that brought victory. Brouillet set the UMass course record at 14:19 early in the season and then broke it last Saturday with a 14:16.5 finish against New Hampshire. Colbern, who never placed lower than third, holds the Amherst course record with a 16:10 run.

HEN '63

The most improved harrier was ick Comerlings. He improved his time by nearly two minutes over the season.

One of the season's highpoints was Brouillet's role in UMass was Brouillet's role in UMass' 25-32 win over Harvard. Bob beat Harvard's Ed Means, the New England high school champ in cross country, by twenty-five yards in winning. Again it was the Redmen's team effort that insured the win sured the win.

Members will be expected to run with the indoor track team. There will be a meeting today at 4:30 in room 310 for all those interested in the indoor season.

Quarterback John McCormick attempted eleven passes completing eight with one interception for a total pass yardage of 137 net yards gained.

The amazing Redmen defense held the Springfield team to a net rushing gain of 39 yards and 142 net yards passing. UMass combined for a total offense of 315 yards. They gained 162 yards on the ground and 153 in the air.

THE ROUT STARTS

From the opening series of plays the handwriting was on the wall as McCormick and his gang received the ball on the kickoff and drove down field. They were thwarted deep in enemy territory by an interception.

After Springfield received the ball on the kickoff they were once again unable to dent the UMass defense. The Redmen took the punt deep in their own territory and started another productive scoring drive that was dominated by the running of Kezer and the masterful quarterbacking of Mc-Cormick who capped the play with a handoff to Delnickas from the one. You know who added the extra point to put the Redmen out in front 14-0.

UMASS DOMINATES

The game continued this story-book pattern as Springfield was unable to move the pigskin against the rough tough UMass linemen and the Marooners generously gave up the ball with narry a fight.

The Redmen, eager opportunists and still hungry made quick work pay off for another TD. This time General McCormick arched a spiralling pinpoint pass to Majeski in the endzone who was Johnny on the spot to gather

Harriers Trounce UNH, Finish Winning Season As YC Champs

by DICK QUINN '63

Coach Footrick's Harriers put the finishing touch to a tremen-dous season by trouncing U.N.H. Saturday, 20-41. There was little question from the beginning as to which team was expected to win, but it was a golden oppor-tunity to pair sensational Davey Balch against Wildcat ace Doug MacGregor.

It was evident that MacGregor, the number one runner in the MacGregor was ahead as the two entered the field aside the two entered the field aside the W.P.E. building, but the lead had been reduced to 3 yards—and there were only 200 yards remaining. With 100 yards left, Balch summoned all his energy to put on a fantastic sprint, and MacGregor could do little but watch. Balch crossed the line first and was timed in 24 minutes, 28.5 seconds, breaking the course record by 7 seconds. MacGregor record by 7 seconds. Soccer Squad Looks Forward To Better 1961

With the mothballing of the soccer equipment for another year coach Brigg's club can look back over the season with mixed emotions.

Although the team was unable to chalk up a victory, they were more successful concerning the intangible phase of the game. This may sound a bit trite but the fact remains that the team's spirit remained high throughout. It was also evident as the season drew to a close, that the team drew to a close, that the team was showing genuine improve-ment. Proof of this lies in the comparatively low scores of their last two games with Tufts and Farleigh Dickinson, two topnotch oponents.

Although impossible to single out any one player as the best, a few names should be mentioned here. At the top of the list is cocaptain Chuck Hulett, an excel-lent all around player. A stand-out on defense, he continually broke up enemies' scoring thrusts and played just as well at halfback. The other co-captain Andy Psilackus also did a good job as did Chuck Repetta and Stan Paleocrassus

Marching Band Has Jobs For Many Special Talents

This year, the Redman Marching Band, under the direction of Prof. Joseph Contino, Director of Bands, Theodore Souliotis '62, Bands, Theodore Souliotis '62, manager of the Redman Band, and Robert Small '63, drum major; played at all the home football games, the Harvard and B.U. games and all the Friday night rallies. Behind the intricate formations and precise playing displayed at the games, both during half-time and pre-game, lie many hours of rehearsal.

During a week when the band is playing at a game, they rehearse every night from 5 p.m. to 6 p.m. on the soccer field. Early in the week, the main emphasis is placed on the music, and the formations are just outlined. On Thursday and Friday nights the Precisionettes and the Band get together and work out the routines more carefully.

Positions For Non-Playing

Members
Much work goes on behind the cenes to bring the UMass stu-ents their Marching Band. Any University student who is interested in the band, yet doesn't join because he can't play an instrument, is sure to find a job among the many non-playing positions. Some of these positions include; public relations; properties (taking care of the instruments, uniforms etc. of the band members), drill people, who plan the formations, photographers, to take pic-tures of the formations for later study, and many other jobs.

New Organization Begins Now

Within a week of the Band-Precisionette banquet held soon after the last game of the season in which the Band plays, forms are sent out to freshmen who might want to joint again next year, majorette tryouts are held, and the competition for Drum Major is held. This year's very successful banquet was held No-vember 14 at the Lord Jeffery Inn. Band leaders have indicated that now is the time to sign up for next year's band for any position, playing or non-playing. However, new members are taken on any time during the foot-

Staff Members

The staff members on the Band are chosen from its members. This year's staff included: Theodore Souliotis, Manager; Robert Small, Drum Major; James Levine, Business manager; Janice Bigelow, Secretary; Norman Seigel, Personnel Secretary; Jane Pursglove, Librarian; Lawrence Soule, Properties manager; Su-san Onksen, Public Relations Manager; Dennis Morrissey, Peter Pelton, William Russell, and Edward Simches.

Handicapped Child Topic Of Home Ec.

by GRACE FITZPATRICK '63

"The Handicapped Child and His Family" was the topic of the lecture given by Miss Barbara Jeanne Seabury at the November meeting of the Home Economics

Miss Seabury, who graduated from the University of Rhode Is-land and received her Master's Degree in Special Education at Eastern Michigan University, teaches Child Development at both Smith College and at UMass. She was formerly program coordinator at the Easter Seals Foundation in Indiana.

Miss Seabury explained that in planning a program for the handicapped child emphasis has changed from the problems of the child to those of the child and his family since it is the parents who must bear most of the mental anguish concerning the young handicapped child. She pointed out that many parents pointed out that many parents fail to recognize the handicapped child either because they refuse to believe that their child is defective or they diagnose the handicap as a disciplinary problem as is common in partial deafness.

Miss Seabury illustrated the role of the agencies such as the one which she represented. She showed how the agency takes over after the physician's diagnosis to plan a program of treat-ment, recreation and education which will best suit the child's condition and his family's situa

UMASS INTERROGATOR A CAMPUS OPINION POLL

by BARBARA YETWIN '64

For some years, the question has arisen after each presidential election, as to whether or not the election, as to whether or not the Electoral College is still the best method of electing the President. Many people feel that since most sections of the country now use voting machines, which count the vote as it is registered, the popular vote would be a much better indication as to who is, "the people's choice."

Since this past nation-wide election was, by popular vote so very close, the Immense Interrogative now asks: Do you feel that the Electoral College system as it is now, should be abandoned in this country?

Varied facial expressions were to be seen as students lunching in the Hatch were suddenly faced with this question.

Louise Anketell '61, a Math major living in Hamlin House replied, after thinking for several moments, "It's outdated, definitely. It was established when people didn't know the candidates well, and had to depend on their electors to do their choosing. People today have a chance to know the candidates, as with the TV debates. Each man's vote should count as much as another man's."

A Freshman from Plympton, Dennis Morrissey, answered slowly, "Yes. The way the Electoral College is set up, it is possible for a candidate to have the popular vote but lose in the College just by not carrying the larger states."

just by not early states."
Hilda Fannick '62 from Springfield, was quick to reply, "Yes. I don't think it's fair to a cantile like Nixon that won. It's didate like Nixon that won. It's absolutely unfair; it's outdated.

One graduate student, Matt Treadup, said simply, "Seems to me that it's pretty fair."

An art major, Eva Holway '61, thought as she replied, "Yes. It really doesn't represent the people as well as it might. It should be modified to represent the people more accurately."

A few booths later, senior Everett Benson answered, "Oh, yes, I do. There is a possibility that a president can be chosen that is not really wanted by the majority of America."

Julie Buraczynski, a commuter member of the Freshman class, said quickly, "Yes. It doesn't ex-press the popular opinion."

A Stockbridge student from New Haven, Jack Dirr '62, replied "I think it should be determined by the popular vote—that's the people's choice."

Well, you've read some people's opinions on the Electoral College. If you had been asked suddenly what your views on our country's system of electing its most impor-tant official was, what would you have answered?

An exposé of books and prints will be presented to the members of the UMass complex and the residents of the Connecticut River valley by the UMass Book Store and the Lecture Committee of the English department.

This is the third annual exposition, known as the Book and Print Fair, and will be held in the ommonwealth Room of the S.U. Commonwealth Room of the S.U. from Monday through Saturday, Dec. 5-10, 1960. Browsers are welcomed from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily, and from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday.

Best In Books Offered

According to Augustine J. Ryan, manager of the University Store, the purpose of the fair is to expose the people of UMass to the "best in books", both current and traditional. These latest editions are a good representation of the books available to the general public.

Ryan, who has been with the book store since 1950, has high hopes for this year's fair. The previous venture in 1952 called "Sleighbell Gift Store", which operated from the basement of North College, was more of a sale, and was dropped after two or three years, proving unsuccessful.

Morison's talk will be the sec-ond in a series of addresses to be given by distinguished Americans under a new Alumni War Me-morial Lectureship established here. First speaker in the series was W. W. Rostow, economic was W. W. Rostow, economic historian at M.I.T., who spoke on America's international prospects under a new president. Prof. Morison will give his lecture on Monday, December 5, at 8:15 p.m. in the SU ballroom.

Noted historian, biographer, and high-ranking naval officer, Morison is Jonathan Trumbull Professor of American History, Emeritus, at Harvard University. Biographer of Columbus and of John Paul Jones, he is author of Naval Strategy in the Pacific— the monumental "History of U.S. Naval Operations in World War II," the last volume of which was issued two weeks ago.

Decorated by USN

Morison, who was commissioned in the U.S. Naval Reserve in 1942 in order to gain first-hand knowledge of the events later described in the 14-volume history, retired from the Reserve Corps in 1951 with the rank of rear admiral. During his service in the Navy, the Harvard his-torian served on 11 different ships and acquired seven battle stars and the Legion of Merit with Combat Clasp.

Pulitzer Prize Winner

Author of numerous books, he has been the recipient of the Jusserand Medal, the Loubat Prize and the Bancroft Prize for his achievements as an historian. His biography of Columbus, "Admiral of The Ocean Sea", was heralded as a distinguished bio-graphical writing. For this work he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for biographical writing. "Oxford History of the Ameri-can People" is the title of the one book which Morison is presently engaged in writing.

UConn Teacher Association Asks For Higher Salaries

The newly-formed teachers union at the University of Connecticut has called for higher salaries for faculty members and t. liberalization of the school's promotion system.

The university's chapter of the American Federation of Teachers said today that these subjects were discussed at a meeting with UConn president A. N. Jorgen-

The chapter proposed a salary schedule calling for a minimum of $6,300 a year for instructors; $7,100 annually for assistant professors, $8,800 a year for associate p of essors, and $10,000 annually for full professors.

It said that only the salary request for full professors was higher than the minima proposed by the state colleges.

The union also recommended a better consultation system with faculty members for a "more rep-resentative" viewpoint of the faculty on matters of promotion. It suggested changes in the promotion policy and a revision of the laws and by-laws relating to qualifications required for promo-

The chapter said the distribution of promotions "is out of line with other comparable institutions."

Senator Asserts Abuses In Officials' Testimonials

Legislation designed to eliminate testimonials to state and local officials, and to require judicial appointments within 30 days after a vacancy occurs—both subjects of complaint during the Furcolo administration — were filed with the Legislature for action next year.

The testimonial measure was sponsored by Senator Philip R. Granam (R-Hamliton), who as-Granam (R-Hamliton), who asserted that the practice of running testimonials has been

A response was given by Judith Allen, '61, House Chairman, in which she told of dormitory life on the campus, and of the troubles, dreams and aspirations of the girls in this particular dorm. A chorus of students singing "Bless This House" was led by Ann Shutty '61, a resident of Johnson House.

WHO SEES THEM?

"The library complex will provide space for future expansion of the book collection to 460,000 volumes . . . The present book collection now numbers 221,000 volumes in the University Library and the 30 departmental and laboratory libraries." So states the current UMass catalog.

Today, however, who sees the books?

In the fall of 1960 the Library addition opened, and with it arrived the era of "closed stacks".

* The closed stacks came about to "protect" the University's book collections.

* The closed stacks came about as the only "practical" answer to the problem.

* The closed stacks came about, and there vanished from this campus the intellectually curious individual who roamed the stacks casually examining and reading volumes which appeared "interesting". Gone, too, is any opportunity for "browsing" without specific topics, books, and catalog numbers in hand.

The "Era of Closed Stacks" is the "Error of Closed Stacks."

Goodell's administrators may feel that their books must be protected, but must they be protected from perusal?

Goodell's hierarchy has proclaimed the closed stacks a necessity, but why have they ignored the procedures employed at other institutions, whereby "control" is assured by a door check?

Suggestions that the door check system would require extra personnel fall apart when one realizes that the 'assistant librarians' would no longer be needed to announce to undergraduates that they "cannot find the book requested". These people could obviously be re-employed as the door attendants.

When other larger libraries can "safely" use a door inspection system, despite the fact that both enrolled students and "outsiders" use its research facilities, why cannot the UMass library follow suit?

Books are in the library, and we have every assurance that the collections are being expanded, but who sees them?

What's In A Name?

The Student Union Governing Board is currently considering changing the name of the Student Union.

Student Union Director William Scott, who proposed the change, explained at the Board's November 9 meeting that many other colleges are changing the names of their student centers.

While there doesn't seem to be a real need for us to change the name of the Union, there isn't likely to be much opposition to a more distinctive name either.

However, if the Board does decide that a different name would give our Union more stature, we strongly urge that the word "Student" be kept in the name, as a reminder to everyone that it is paid for by and to be operated in the interests of the students.

Developing Creativity In The Living Mind

by GENEVIEVE REALL '63

It is a truism that on campus, assimilation, not creation, is most encouraged. The typical student is content to be confronted with a mass of data, to master it (more or less), and then to re-communicate the material to the instructor in the form of exams. This is a learning—of sorts. But it leaves little room for the student with creative proclivities, who would like to present in a unique form what he has learned so that it will acquire new meaning. For the most part, he must do this when and how he can with no authoritative encouragement. He must find time, outside of his studies, to experiment with whatever form he deals. There is virtually almost no time for such activity unless the person is endowed with remarkable energy. Why is it not encouraged more within the academic framework? The answer might be that the essentials must be mastered before they can be utilized creatively; but this is inadequate. Individual expression need not be inhibited by any level of accomplishment. The student of literature need not wait until he has acquired a broad reading background before he attempts a novel; the budding psychologist cannot learn his material merely from the textbooks and then expect to be ready to understand persons or to advance hypotheses; formal learning is a necessary, but not a sufficient, condition for success in creativity. The student, then, must begin, experienced or not at the earliest time feasible, to exercise the faculty of critical observation and of theoretical venture. In short, creativity cannot be taught, and should be promoted at the earliest possible point.

Why is creative endeavor important at all? Perhaps if this question were answered the writer might gain a more sympathetic audience. The answer is both personal and universal. First, individual expression and experimentation give purpose and integration to the personality. Values come into focus more clearly; a particular outlook on life is better established; appreciation of either social or natural phenomena is enhanced; the person gains better control over his faculty and is the more confident for it. This is integration; it is inward harmony achieved through outward expression. Also, creativity provides meaning and motivation. Once a product comes into being it acquires meaning insofar as it satisfies the producer and as it relates to the human condition. This meaning gives the creator incentive to renew the task. And here is where universality comes in.

A creative product does not exist for itself. If it has no general social purpose it is doomed. The creative personality is forced to think in terms of usefulness: why? For what end? He is obliged to give his work a place in the social structure because he perceives that only there does it have most significance. Hence, creativity has universal value.

For example, the literary craftsman is successful inasmuch as he can give expression to society as a whole. He must reach into our hearts and touch what is common to humanity as he knows it. If he can tap the springs of our compassion, of our sense of magic, of our sense of pain—he has succeeded. Insofar as he can make us realize, to a finer degree, our potentials of human consciousness and feeling, he is master of his art. If he is able—though only for a brief moment—to stir our sense of fraternity with mankind, to somehow make the swift magic of autumn or the way clouds form in a wintry sunset suddenly unique and wonderful—he has done well. This is his own fulfillment and his value among men. He has made experience novel.

Such is the main purpose of all artistic endeavor. It is achieved firstly through the artist's compassion and reverence for life, through a wondering and loving acceptance of humanity from its most ignoble to its most exalted members, and through a deep pity for the suffering peculiar to each or common to all of his fellows. Compassion and wonder: these are the rudiments. They encompass the most obscure personalities and the humblest circumstances as well as the most unusual. They arise out of a precious capacity to accurately share others' experience and a perception that there is beauty in all aspects of life simply for the reason that it is life. As Arnold Bennett put it: "... A sense of the picturesque ... Walking down Edith Grove this afternoon, I observed the vague, mysterious beauty of the vista of houses and bare trees melting into a distance of grey fog. And then, in King's Road, the figures of tradesmen at shopdoors, of children romping or stealing along mournfully, of men and women each totally different from each other, and all serious, wrapt up in their own thoughts and ends—these seemed curiously strange and novel and wonderful." One who experiences this cannot fully communicate it to others because it is even more than just "novel and wonderful." There is, too, a gripping perception of universality, an emotion of oneness with all mankind, and a moving awareness that—no matter what is thought or said or theorized about life—this is experience. And the artist respects experience. It is undeniable. One can refute theories and philosophies but experience is irrefutable.

With regard to scientific creativity, we may say that compassion is to the artist what receptivity is to the scientist. The artist is open to all experience; the scientist is open to all facts. The quest of the latter begins in much the same manner as that of the artist. He, too, experiences wonder about his surroundings. He too is spurred to derive truth from what he sees. But the difference between them is that while the artist is entranced by the beauty of the felt, the scientist is entranced by the beauty of the lawful. The former gives expression to the universal, the latter provides explanations.

Both are essential to society. The first reminds us that we are alive, and the second reveals laws shaping our lives. To return to my original point—there must be more early encouragement for both.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

For the information of all who do not know, there was an election held for Fraternity Senator on Wednesday, November 16. As the turn out for this election exemplifies, a very small percentage of the involved constituents were aware that this election was taking place.

The first and only announcement of the vacancy available was in the November 14th Collegian, listed under the "Club Directory". A grand total of three and one half hours was provided for the procuring, signing, and returning of the nomination sheets. This, of course, does not include time out for classes.

When the election was held on Wednesday, with the exception of one small poster (partially covered by a "Kingsley For President" sign) there was absolutely no attempt to notify the eligible voters of the election. Several times during the day, the SU public address system announced that freshman elections were in progress in the lobby. Not once during the day was a single word heard about the fraternity senator election.

Perhaps this is due to the fact that not even the SU was aware that this election was taking place. The burden of blame for this blunder rests upon the Student Senate. We would suggest that the next time they hold elections for a Senator, be it fraternity, sorority, dormitory or any other, they provide sufficient time for interested candidates to procure and return their nomination papers, and give adequate publicity to the election, so that more than 20% of the voters will have an opportunity to determine the legislator.

To the Editor:

In this day and age when worthy achievements are recognized, it is now time to pay tribute to the powers of genial mind behind our coveted Dining Commons. I am referring to what could only have been a most rigorous plan for organizing the lines. The new line downstairs seems to be reserved for Stockbridge, and only a limited number of students can be accommodated in the eyes of the "Great Chef." Therefore, there is never a line downstairs and the students in Lines 2 and 3 can "burn" while standing their customary half hour in their lines.

But is this their only accomplishment? No, it seems that Line 3 is longer than Line 2. The plan reached its maximum one cold fall night when Line 3 numbered approximately 150 and Line 2 numbered 6; this doesn't happen often, but it does happen. One might ask why students aren't transferred from one line to another to equalize "pressure." Well this is only done by the "Great Chef" when closing time is near or in other words when the Dining Commons has the most to benefit.

The next step, of course, in the plan is the opening of the new addition. You see, to continue the situation in such a pleasing manner, why not have only a few select students eat there and keep the lines in the Commons as long as they are now? But why prognosticate? The minds behind the Commons are in a much higher realm than ours, and we could never comprehend their idea of organization.

So a tip of the hat to the Dining Commons, another milestone in making dining at the University as miserable as possible.

Hungry Student

The phrase "dark horse" came into political parlance from racing. Generations ago in England, there was a sneaky practice of dying the hair of a well-known horse black, and entering him in a race under a false name. It became customary to apply the term "dark horse" to any unknown horse that won a big race.

INTEGRATED DORMITORY SYSTEM SURVEYED:

Many Upperclass Women Against Current Dormitory Integration

In September of 1958, the systhe system of integrating the women's dormitories went into effect. The institution of the plan was prefaced by a year of discussions and surveys conducted by the Dean of Women's office.

With integrated dorms, a quota is established for each class in every dormitory. The largest percentage can go to upperclassmen, with the balance to freshmen.

If a particular dormitory rush of upperclassmen, then e other dormitories will of necessity receive more freshmen residents. Before this plan was instituted, each dormitory had only members of one class living Women from Hamlin, Arnold, and Thatcher were asked to express their opinions on the cur-rent integration system. Hamlin is a former upperclass dormitory, which now has more freshmen occupants than any other class.

Arnold is a former freshman dormitory which now has only 95 reshmen among its 234 residents. Thatcher is also a former freshman dorm now containing only 25% freshmen. Seniors and Housemothers

Seniors and housemothers of the specified dormitories were generally the only ones ques-tioned in the survey because they are the only ones now on campus who have lived in both 'fresh-men' and 'integrated' dorms.

For example, they are afraid to elect another freshman for a dorm office. For upperclassmen, integrated dorms are beneficial. It gives the upperclassmen more spirit. Carol Jones—a senior house chairman. "I am against integrated dormitories. When you have freshmen dorms you have more spirit. They don't adopt the apathetic viewpoints of upperclassmen. The only thing is there are many more cliques. Freshmen in integrated dorms miss out on a lot of fun. I would rather on a lot of fun. I would rather go back to freshmen dorms, and I don't know one person who is I don't know one person who is for integrated dorms. We spoke at SWAP about it and everyone is for it. The only thing is that at SWAP about it and everyone is for it. The only thing is that if there were going to be a small amount of freshmen who had to be in a dorm with upperclassmen because there wasn't enough room for them in a freshmen dorm, then I would rather have integrated dorms. It is not fair to penalize a few students."

Anonymous—junior counselor at Arnold. "I can see dirty rushing going on because of integrating going on because of integrat-ed dorms. Several sororities can be seen pitted against one another. It was never like that be-fore. Rushing keeps the fresh-men from studying. Upperclassmen in sororities go into the freshmen's rooms and bother them."

Ann Reseigh—senior house chairman. "I am against integrated dorms. The spirit of the fresh-men dorms was really wonderful. The dorms are probably noisier and rowdier with only freshmen, but at times of exams they fully sympathize with each other and keep quiet. Upperclassmen tell freshmen not to take studying seriously. With the upperclassmen coming in at all hours be-fore eleven o'clock and making noise, all quiet hours are disrupt-ed for freshmen."

Bobbi Bernstein—senior house chairman in Thatcher. "I am definitely for freshmen dorms. Freshmen should be more orient-(Continued on page 8)

"I ENGINEERED MICROWAVE TOWER LOCATIONS ON MY FIRST ASSIGNMENT"

When Bill Pigott knocked on the door of Pacific Telephone, he had two big assets. One was an electrical engineering degree from Scattle University. The other was a craving to jump right into vital engineering problems.

It was not long before Bill was exploring Washington's rugged Cascade Range in a helicopter to find sites for microwave relay towers -part of a multimillion dollar telephone construction job. Today, it's considerable satisfaction to him to see these towers spanning the mountains, knowing that his planning helped put them there.

Other important assignments followed: engineering maritime radio systems, SAGE systems -figuring engineering costs for Air Force Titan missile bases

'Our people respect a man's engineering training-you really get a chance to show what you've got on the ball," Bill says. "I was up to my neck in tough engineering problems right from the start '

If you want a job where you put your training to work from the day you hang up your hat-you'll want to visit your Placement Office for literature and additional information.

UMass Seen In Four Way YanCon Basketball Fight

Maine, URI, UConn Loom As Obstacles

by AL BERMAN '62, Sports Editor

Coach Matt Zunic sees a four way basketball battle in the Yankee Conference this season, and claims that UMass will definitely be one of the rivals if several big questions are resolved.

The questions revolve around
Don Black, a sky-high sophomore who is breaking into the varsity who is breaking into the varsity line-up without having played in competition for over a year. In order to make room for the promising Black, Coach Zunic has moved last year's starting center, Charlie Fohlin, to forward position, and has switched Doug Grutchfield to the back court.

CAN THEY CLICK?

The questions are whether or

The questions are whether or not all of these men can click in their new positions. But the Coach thinks that if this combination does work out, with Mike Mole and Kirk Leslie at the other two positions, UMass could be a great surprise to the other three contenders, Maine, URI and

New Hampshire and Vermont are undermanned as far as the title is concerned, but could prove to be the spoilers for any one of the other teams. In discussing his team's chances, Coach Zunic pointed out that he has had no real chance to observe the Redmen in competition this year, since they have had no scrimmages. NCAA rules allow a team to engage in only 26 games per season, including scrimmages. The Redmen have a 26-game schedule, so they aren't allowed any scrimmages. The only playing the team has done

UMass News Office Is Official Campus Voice?

The duty of the University News Office, UMass' public in-formation department, is to re-port to the Commonwealth, and occasionally farther afield, all the activities on the campus, except those concerning agriculture and sports. Over the desk of Bill Deminoff, director of the University News Service, go all types of reporting from general news to radio and television coverage.

This extensive field is covered by a staff of one photographer, two clerks, and three students two clerks, and three students (on the Student Bureau), two of whom do home town reporting and one who does general news writing in addition to Deminoff.

Send Releases To Papers

The News Office brings the public eye to the University in publications, and radio and tele-vision. Of these three, the news-paper is probably the most im-portant because of its wide cov-erage and greater frequency. On the average one story a day is written, from an article in a University small town newspaper stating public in- that one of the students made that one of the students made the Dean's List, to a series on the University such as that which appeared in the Boston Globe recently. Since all the news given out by the office wouldn't be of interest to all newspapers, there is a screening of which area in New England gets what story. An article is sent to as story. An article is sent to as large an area as feasible.

Within the past year over 1200 "home town" articles have been sent out. However, in the case of an article of greater importance it is sent to as great an area as is considered necessary. In fact, articles from the News Office have occasionally appeared in the New York Times.

Although there is a very small

Atthough there is a very small staff, many special features are written on services offered by the University. A recent article was written on the class in speech therapy which is being held in Bartlett Hall under the direction of Dr. Lorg F. Harster. of Dr. Inez E. Hegarty.

Importance of Publications

Public recognition of the University is increased by the various publications edited by the News Service. Included in the list put out by the News Office are: the Undergraduate Catalog, the General Information Bulletin, the Summer Sessions Bulletin, the Graduate School Catalog, and the Stockholder. log, and the Stockbridge Catalog.

Work Also For Radio, TV

In another communication media, radio and television, the News Office hasn't been able to do very much. Bill Deminoff wrote a show for WBZ's "Breakthrough" on the " on the services offered at the University, placing special emphasis on Dr. Richard S. Stein in the chemistry department. Moreover, the faculty and admin-istration sometimes appear on general interview programs on local or Boston et ince local or Boston stations.

Throughout their entire public relations program, the News Of-fice is interested in reflecting the quality program at the Univer-sity, not by any "Madison Avenue" techniques, but rather by showing what the University truly is

DR. FROOD'S THOUGHT FOR THE DAY: "Life ain't all beer and skittles," as the saying goes -but if enough students got together, maybe skittles could make a big comeback.

Dear Dr. Frood: I just don't understand the men in this college. Not one of them has ever asked me for a date. I am intelligent and easy to get along with. Enclosed is my snapshot. What do you think is wrong?

Left Out DEAR LEFT: After considering this problem from every angle, I can only conclude that you have enormous feet.

Dear Dr. Frood: According to my figures over ninety-five per cent of the students here are below average. What is wrong?

DEAR MATH: You are obviously going to a below-average college.

Dear Dr. Frood: I don't speak from personal experience, but I understand all the men in this college are wolves. What do you think a respectable girl like me—with a good old-fashioned upbringing—should do about this situation?

Strait Laced DEAR STRAIT: Drop your handkerchief.

Dear Dr. Frood: When I entered college as a freshman this fall, my father gave me a very large sum of money to cover room, board, tuition, books and all other expenses for four full years of college. Because of an unfortunate series of poker games, however, the money is now completely gone. How would you suggest I handle this situation?

DEAR TEN: I feel confident that your father will give you another chance if you go up to him like a man, tell him you are sorry, admit your mistake and promise him that your luck will change.

Dear Dr. Frood: Do you think it is safe for a girl to walk home dance?

Nervous DEAR NERVOUS: Safer.

DON'T BREAK TRADITION, WARNS FROOD! One of the proudest traditions on the American campus, reports Dr. Frood, is smoking Luckies. Today college students smoke more Luckies than any other regular. According to Dr. Frood, "Any student who breaks this tradition not only robs himself of the full pleasure of smoking—but also could, conceivably, bring 'the Curse of Frood' down upon the entire student body."

Survey Conducted On Student Wages

by WARREN RICHARD '64 Collegian Staff Reporter

Two years ago the minimum student wage on campus was raised from 60 to 75 cents an hour, as a result of a survey conducted through many colleges, which revealed the average minimum wage to be 75 cents per hour. The survey was conducted by Robert Morrissey, Director of Placement, and five former Student Senate members: Allen Christenson '58, Barbara Mills '58, Elmer Brooks '58, Harry Lane '58, and Arthur Shaw '59. In the past two years, however, wages in all professions have been raised considerably. Are the UMass student wages again low-er than the average? The Coler than the average? The Col-legian is now conducting a similar survey to answer this question. The results will be reported when complete.

Seniors And Grad Students Urged To Examine Grants

Seniors and graduate students interested in going into research at graduate schools should look at graduate schools should look up the many opportunities for scholarships, fellowships, loans, and assistantships offered by various graduate schools throughout the country

Assistant Director of Placement for Men David P. Law-rence, who is in charge of all scholarship and loan programs, said that there are many grants of money which go untouched be-cause of an unawareness of their existence. "They don't do me any good," he stated, "and they don't do the students any good unless they look them up."

Lawrence receives literature on scholarship-loan information from almost every university in the nation. Although many of them are specified for certain fields of study, there are also many gen-eral ones which beg looking into.

Mrs. Anne Tanner, Director of Placement for Women, agreed with Lawrence that these opportunities should be looked into before the turn of the year. Many applications have deadlines in January and early February. "Too many students lose out on the opportunities because they didn't find out about them in time or didn't apply soon enough after didn't apply soon enough after they found out about them," said Mrs. Tanner.

Schools involved in sending information to the Placement of-fice include the University of Pittsburgh, Washington Univer-sity, Ohio State University, Uni-versity of Nevada, Mount Holy-oke, Wellesley, Yale, Brown, and others.

Senator Andy D'Avanzo '63 an-nounced that an open meeting will be held by the Budgets Commit-tee on December 12. The purpose of the meeting is to discuss the budgets for the coming year of Adelphia, the Foreign Student Aid program, Amateur Radio As-sociation, and Mortar Board. The policies concerning the Freshman Directory (Mugbook) and the Index will also be brought up for discussion.

After long and heated discussion, a motion to appropriate over $300 to the Collegian was passed. This money will be used to cover the cost of mailing the paper to subscribers. Presently the Collegian printer, Hamilton Newell, does the job.

It was pointed out that the University Judging Team, which was unanimously voted to be given the "continued support of the Student Senate" two weeks ago, was not dropped from the Student Tax fund last spring. Rather, it was merely put aside "to be considered at the begin-ning of the fall semester."

Schwartz To Give Recital

Pianist Elliott Schwartz rehearses for his recital, scheduled for Monday.

Swiss Cheese, Tuning Forks, And Study Rooms

All of us have seen Hills House. Exteriorly, it is tastefully colored with blue-brick paneling, while large picture windows afford sufficient amounts of light and ventilation. In both Hills North and Hills South there lives a wise housemother, ever-ready to be of help in all sorts of situations. The physical facilities of the building are well-kept by the conscientious and competent janitors.

Let it not be said that those are unimportant considerations. Indeed, they serve as a source of consolation when one realizes that the walls of Hills are made of Swiss cheese, with sound-proofing found only in the corridor. This, along with the fact that with the brisk closing of doors a constant state of vibration prevails, is unnerving to many Hills residents.

Yet, the fellows in Hills are willing to endure the Swiss cheese walls and the tuning-fork atmosphere if only to obtain a bit of study and sleep. Unfortunately, the fellows in Hills have been partially deprived of one of these cardinal privileges: namely, study.

In Hills, there are two large rooms in which to study. The first of these is the "recreation" room in the basement. This room, however, has been closed at 12 P.M. because of damage to vending machines located in an adjacent room. The second of these rooms is the large and beautifully decorated study room. Unfortunately, this room is also closed at 12 P.M. because of damage to the exquisite furniture. Incidentally, the furniture in this particular room is generally conceded to be unduly extravagant, more befitting an American Embassy than a dormitory study room.

We thus offer a partial solution to this problem. To facilitate studying in the "recreation" room after 12 P.M. without damage to the vending machines, we suggest the immediate appropriation of about two hundred dollars deemed sufficient for the installation of a protective screen which would, of course, insure the safety of the machines. Although this has long been fought for by certain members of the administration, no action has yet been taken.

If this could be accomplished, it would be the initial step toward the just end. However, it must be admitted that the room to keep open is not the recreation room in the basement, but the "study" room on the main floor. Until this is done, the luxurious "study" room on the main floor cannot truly be called a study room, but merely a "sometimes-study" room.

We have full confidence in the administration's efforts to expedite a satisfactory solution to this problem. -M. P.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Let us consider the idea of taking an oral comprehension exam, covering all one's courses, instead of several written final exams.

Such a system would give a student more of an opportunity to expound to a greater extent on his knowledge, and, also, would show if he had the ability to piece together all he had learned from his years at college. In this type of exam, individuality can be greatly expressed, for the answers to the questions would not be a "cut and dried" right or wrong. Clear thinking would be a necessity, and when the confused student, in preparation for the exam, attempts to piece together his parts to the jig-saw puzzle of knowledge, he will find that, somehow, they all do fit together and make sense.

However, with several written exams a student will study separately for each exam, and, thus, might never see any connection between a bit of knowledge in one subject, and a bit in another. Also, an answer is either right or wrong, and not in between.

Suppose a person knew quite a bit about a subject, but couldn't remember the answer to one specific question. Is it fair to mark that person as if he knew nothing whatsoever on the subject the question concerned? An oral exam would eliminate this problem, for then one could tell what he did know about the subject, and be given credit for what he did know.

Coe College, in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, adopted just such a method. The exam was set up to cover the areas of human cultures, arts, and sciences, without special emphasis on one's major field, and was taken in the student's junior year of college. A rating sheet was given to each junior, so he would know on just what he would be graded. Grading was given on the basis of 3 for superior, 2 for passing, and 1 for inadequate. A committee of four members gave the exam to each student. Each area covered on the exam had a representative from that field on each committee. In this manner the faculty was able to ascertain just how much knowledge each student had acquired.

THE SENATOR

by RAY WILSON '64

This, the second appearance of 'The Senator' was to have been devoted to the answering of speci-fic questions and comments concerning the Student Senate, How over, a letter to the editor of this newspaper, by one "D.G.", which appeared in Wednesday's edition, led me to feel that we have here an example of a problem which merits immediate attention. By problem, I do not mean the speci-fic one that this letter dealt with (fraternity elections) but one of a more general and pressing nature—to wit, the problem of communications between the students and the Student Senate.

Committee Overlooked Details

D.G.'s comments were sound but unfortunately belated. The Elections Committee, saddled by the larger and more complicated men elections, did overlook details of the fraternity election. However, had some aspects of this situation been called to the attention of the committee at that time, they might

It is the intention of the Senate encourage-not discourage such critism, but I do feel that a critic should attempt to present it in a more timely and construc-tive manner. Is it not reasonable to assume that complaints concerning the Senate should be addressed to the Senate or to an individual Senator who will see that the complaint is acted upon?

D.G. Commended

D.G. should definitely be commended for talking action on his interest in the student welfare. It is the profound wish of many of Senators that more of the students take such an interest and act in a manner that will be beneficial to that interest. Unfortunately, many an extensive letter has appeared in the Collegian when a mere word to a Senator would have sufficed— perhaps have accomplished more. More than once, a student has gone out on a limb and assailed the Senate for an act in which it had no part—such as the cancel-ling of the weekday holidays. Often a young crusader has de-manded that the Senate take certain action—only to learn that such action was already in process. Worse yet—some students with practical suggestions and legitimate complaints have hesi-tated to submit them—and the whole student body has suffered as a result.

The Senators make no pretense at being all-seeing or all-knowing. They need the as-sistance of the other students in the form of suggestions, opinions, and/or complaints in order to render proper representation. A student may submit such comments to his Senator or if he wishes them published may drop a brief note in my mail-box in the Collegian Office, S.U. No formal form is necessary. All notes will be answered impartially; this column has not been initiated as a biased defender of Senatorial blunders, nor as a crier for Senatorial accomplishments, but as an organ of communications and information be-tween the Senate and the student body, with an ultimate goal of facilitating the general effectiveness of our entire Student

ET TU, MILLS

To the Editor:

This is directed to the more illustrious members of our student body. Their mannerisms and attitudes toward concentrated study and their concept of studying is a bit distorted.

It is a well known fact that if one ventures into the dismal corridors of a freshman dormitory, he is risking the possibility of encountering bodily injury by flying missiles; the opportunity of stumbling down a competely dark, object strewn corridor and of hearing the current selection of the nation's top rock and roll artist blasting through the hallways the hallways.

But when one ventures into a dormitory inhabited primarily by upperclassmen, he expects to find it fairly quiet. One intends to find the doors closed, radios and phonographs lowered if not shut off, and an atmosphere that is conducive to study. This impression is completely misconstrued, for what he finds appears to be a menagerie.

For an institution of learning this is an absolute disgrace. This next cliche might be a little overworked, but where is the intellectualism? Where is the student who has a little research.

ualism? Where is the student who has a little respect for his conorary?

I feel that these conditions which exist in the University housing which impede the University of I feel that these conditions which exist in the University housing facilities are the greatest causes which impede the University of Massachusetts from rising even higher in the ranks of establishments for higher learning. It won't be enough to be selective in choosing applicants for admission, but it will be imperative to provide living quarters in which one may study conscientiously.

TESTY TESTIMONIAL

TESTY TESTIMONIAL

To the Editor:

Well, the Geology department on last Tuesday's exam succeeded in placing a few more white hairs upon my aging head.

The exam began promptly at 6:30 p.m. with a slamming of doors and the distribution of exams. I struggled to pick up the exam which couldn't have weighed more if it contained all the geological events since the first raindrop. I started to answer the question, but to my dismay I was still reading the directions; three-quarters down the page the question began, to be answered with true, false or indeterminate. I have yet to discover when a question can be indeterminate. Other questions pertained to pictures and diagrams which, incidentally, the perverted printer had made barely visible. One question which I answered turned out later to be a picture of Pennuts which was humorously (ha) placed indiscriminately throughout the exam.

To answer a question one had to flip to the last page which couldn't be detached. The correct letters were to be filled in next to the appropriate numbers (capital letters had to be used; small letters were automatically wrong.)

The exam proceeded, each few minutes there being an interrup The exam proceeded, each few minutes there being an inter when the proctor stomped to the front of the room to write on the blackboard.

At 7:20 I was so startled by a blasting voice that I nearly fell out of my seat. The proctor proceeded to give directions on how he wanted the exam booklet turned in.

At 7:30 after the hour long countdown the whistle blew, horns played, arms reached in every direction—I thought the place was being raided. I could hardly move, so was helped out of my seat, a nervous, frustrated, shaking hulk.

The chance for me to have this experience came Tuesday evening, when I wanted to find a certain book. Upon investigation I found that the library did not have the book. Well, what was I to do now? In other libraries I could have gone to the stacks and have seen if a similar book was available. But we undergraduates are allowed to use only the card catalog, so here in the catalog is where I must find the book. I ask you, can one determine the contents of a book from just the title and the author's name?

you, can one determine the contents of a book from just the title and the author's name?

After looking at all the books listed under the appropriate subject, I was finally able to select eight books. I filled out the white "call slips" being very careful to have the correct number, author, and title. After giving the slips to one of the attendants, I waited a few minutes for her to return. When she did, she was carrying the grand total of eight call slips—no books, just call slips. Then I heard those most familiar words: "I'm sorry, but these books are not in now."

Fairyland Of Civil Defense

by MIKE PALTER '63

"The Civil Defense program is a grand illusion. In terms of money it is ludicrous. Through diligent and relentless application of poor planning, confused thinking, and colossal ineptitude, the men charged with the defense of civilians in event of war have managed to squander more than one hundred million dollars worth of surplus Government property turned over to the Civil Defense agencies.

So spoke Senator Stephen M. Young of Ohio. The Senator, by affirming his attitude in respect to the present civil defense organization contrasts sharply with a great many of his colleagues. Yes, of course other Senators and Congressmen share Senator Young's opinion; yet, how many have spoken? How many have acted against the incompetence and theoretical stupidity of the present civil defense organization?

"Of the appropriated funds, more than than 60 per cent is siphoned off for salaries and expenses, much of it to the hacks and defeated office-holders for whom the O.C.D.M. (Office of Civil Defense Mobilization) has become a convenient and com fortable haven in the political storm. Political hasbeens, rejected by their fellow citizens, enjoy top salaries in the Office of Defense Mobilization, and do little except talk vaguely about plan alerts to annoy their neighbors, and distribute countless reams of literature."

Although the Senator contends that civil defense should be under the direction of the military, he also says that "no civil defense program will adequately protect our citizenry should war strike."

"Solid, workable international agreements to dis-

With the passing of each year, revised editions of survival estimates are issued. With the passing of each day we're given less and less of a chance. Theoretical perfection of new bombs and missiles continues. Just how much has concrete improved?

"We should," said the Senator, "be considering ways to feed the two-thirds of humanity who go to bed hungry every night rather than telling Americans to store away a two-week supply of food in useless holes in the ground. Instead of wasting untold billions on a national network of bomb shelters, ve should put just a portion of these dollars into forging links of friendship with other peoples."

(This fellow Young, much too idealistic, uppity type fellow, should come down to earth.)

Yes, perhaps Senator Young is a bit idealistic. Yet, this idealism is founded on elementary logic and just plain common sense. This logic and com-mon sense completely enveloped Mr. Dulles (who didn't trust anybody) and the American Legioneers (who seem hell bent on reaching Valhalla.)

May they rest in peace.

GAMMA CHI ALPHA

Congratulations to Gamma Chi's two new initiates Donna Bonner, '63 and Reeta Romano, pledges, Joan Dickson, '62, and Julie Mendrek, Sheila Keblin, Nancy Harris, Maryann Cyran, Barbara McDonough, Judy Burke, all class of '63.

A Founders' Day Banquet to celebrate Gamma Chi Alpha's second anniversary was held on November 9th at the Mill Valley Grist Mill Restaurant.

The Gamma Chi's are all very proud of their "angel" Jayne Hayden who played the part of Eliza Gant in the Roister Doister play "Look Homeward Angel."

The newest number on campus is AL 3-5457—the number of GCA's new telephone, of course.

Gamma Chi welcomes her new advisor, Mrs. Albert Broemel, who is originally from Amherst and a graduate of Allegheny College in Pennsylvania.

PI BETA PHI

The Pi Phi's extend warmest congratulations to the seven girls who were initiated on Sunday, November 20. The new initiates are Anne Barton, Trish Chase, Lorrie Gennari, Judy Kelley, Jackie Kearns, Pam O'Donnell and Jan Marshall.

The Pi Phi's held an exchange supper with Tau Kappa Epsilon. A good time was had by all.

SIGMA KAPPA

Parents' Day, Saturday, November 19, was attended by a large number of parents. A buffet luncheon was held, and the Statesmen highlighted the afternoon's entertainment, which was followed by the Parents' Club meeting.

Recently the sophomores of Sigma Kappa entertained the pledges of all the other sororities at a spaghetti dinner, and our new pledges presented a skit.

On Tuesday, November 29, we were honored to have Dean Helen Curtis as a dinner guest.

The Sigmas enjoyed an change supper with ATG on December 1. A Christmas party to be held this year with AGR for the orphans of a near-by orphanage is being looked forward to.

Small Study Rooms Preferred Over Mass Reading Halls

A four college faculty commit-tee has reported that most col-lege students dislike large library reading rooms, that they prefer for a new kind of four year colreading rooms, that they prefer to study in small rooms and that most colleges should spend more time in designing or improving space for their undergraduates.

UMass Prof. Sees Upturn By Mid-1961

Dr. James Ludtke, professor of business administration at UMass, told a meeting of the Western Massachusetts chapter of the American Marketing Association here that he expects both the magnitude and duration of the present downturn in business conditions to be less than the magnitude and duration of previous postwar recessions

Reviews Cycle

He suggested the strong possibility of an upturn as early as mid-1961. Prof. Ludtke reviewed the stages of the so-called typical business cycle and pointed out that changes in the structure of economy and political attitudes have reduced the adverse influences of business cycles.

After reviewing the major forms of short term forecasting. Ludtke used statistical indicators in making his forecast

A discussion of public policies in a period of mild recession followed his formal remarks. The Massachusetts professor is author of "American Financial Systems," a basic textbook to be published in early 1961.

Smiffenpoofs Will Sing At Mili Ball

The Smiffenpoofs, a singing group from Smith College, will be a feature of the intermission entertainment during Saturday's Military Ball.

The group's specialty is mod-ern tunes. The Smiffenpoofs, a group of 12 women, were first organized about 15 years ago.
They have sung at numerous colleges in the area, including Princeton, McGill, Amherst and
Yale. Their widespread recognition has been evidenced by their invitation and subsequent record-ing session in New York for Gotham studios

The singers have selected eight songs for their Saturday night appearance in the Ballroom. North jumps to three spades. South continues to game, Neither East nor West has enough points

East nor West has enough points to enter the bidding safely.

West led his fourth best diamond which South took with the D-K. He led a club which west won with his C-A. West returned a trump; a low spade was played from dummy. East decided to play low and South won the trick with his S-8. A small club was led to dummy's C-K. Declarer now played a small heart to South's ace, returned a heart, trumped it in the dummy, and led a small club. East decided to play a low heart. It does not matter whether East trumps this club or not because South will club or not because South will overruff. Another heart was led and trumped by dummy. Declarer-led a second club to be ruffed. East threw away a heart and South trumped, South's last heart was trumped, south's last heart was trumped with the S-A as East helplessly played the S-6. Dummy's last club was trumped with the S-K as East played the S-7. East won the last trick with the S-Q. South took eleven tricks, making five spades

This type of play, the cross-iff, is indicated whenever the ruff, is indicated whenever the declarer, by counting up his high cards and the number of ruffs, reaches the total number of tricks required. In this hand, South has three losing hearts while dummy has three losing clubs which can be trumped. If the declarer plays be trumped. If the declarer plays even one round of trump and later relinquishes the lead, then the opponents may set the contract by returning a trump. Now declarer will not be able to ruff his losing cards. It is important to remember that if you are going to crossruff a hand, not to play trump.

Next Thursday evening at 6:30, there will be a duplicate bridge game at the Student Union. There is no entry fee and all are invited.

Gymnastics Season Opens Tomorrow Vs. Cortland State

by JIM MULCAHY
Saturday December 3, 1960 marks the initial meet of the 1960-61 UMass Gymnastics Team. Our squad will host Cortland State from New York. We will be pressured by a team that has come a long way since our first intercollegiate meet against them on February 8, 1958. A wonderful team relationship has developed with Cortland at our twice yearly meetings. The previous four meetings were won by U-Mass but this year's team, although in good shape, is not strong. Our number one gymnast has dropped out of school and our number two man is not and our number two man is not eligible until second semester. The brunt of the load for this meet will probably fall upon team captain, Jim Bitgood '61, Charlie Paydos '62, and Bruce McCracken '63. With a fine team of the two could seven be two will be set to the second seco effort we could squeak out a win.

FLUID MOTIONS

If you plan to arrive a little early for the 1:30 p.m. meet you will have a chance to look over your copy of the Eastern Collegiate rules. A score sheet for the six events performed by the gymnasts is accompanied by a model exercise of each event. By looking at the exercise, one can more readily follow these agile men though their routines.

amazed at the beauty and continuity of a performance. "This is," as the coach James Bosco states, "one of the few sports left where how you do is as important as what you do".

Boys to watch in tomorrow's meet are: Paydos, on the flying rings; McCracken, on the sidehorse; Don Cleary, '61, on the rope; and Gary Hagopian, '61, tumbling.

TINY MEMORY UNIT GUIDES GIANT ROCKETS INTO SPACE

On this tiny drum, only four and one-half inches in diameter, is recorded all the significant data needed to direct a rocket into space.

As the rocket blasts skyward, the electronic computer, which includes this small memory unit, begins to monitor the flight. The computer continually correlates data on flight progress with data in the memory unit and makes course corrections instantly.

The very small size and weight of this memory unit is an achievement in itself. Yet other difficult problems had to be overcome - shock, prolonged vibration and extremely high G forces. Only by using new materials and design techniques were these problems solved.

People with backgrounds in the sciences, engineering, and liberal arts all contributed to the success of this project. Ideas which create new products can come from anywhere at IBM. From research, development, programming, manufacturing, marketing.

If you would like a job where your ideas can be put to work in interesting and important areas, then you should consider the many opportunities at IBM. The IBM representative will be interviewing on your campus. He will be glad to discuss career openings at IBM. Your placement officer can make an appointment. Or you may write, outlining background and interests, to: Director of Technical Recruitment, Dept. 897, IBM Corporation, 590 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

You naturally have a better chance to grow with a growth company.

Spotlight On Sports

by AL BERMAN '62, Sports Edite

Many football enthusiasts are ondering whether or not Joe wondering whether or not Joe Bellino can go into pro football instead of joining the service at the end of the current academic year. The fact is, that because Joe is enrolled at Navy, he has a 4 year obligation to Uncle Sam to pay before he has any time of his own. Actually, changes are a year obligation to Uncle Sam to pay before he has any time of his own. Actually, chances are that Bellino prefers it that way, or he wouldn't have attended the Academy in the first place.

All the speculation arises from efforts of pro moneymen to drag Bellino into pro ball. It is interesting to note that Bellino originally applied to West Point but was turned down because he was too small to make the football

Prison Inmates To 'Star' In Their Own TV Stories

The program has been named "Crime and Punishment" and is being made with the cooperation of California Gov. Edmund B. Brown and California Director of Corrections Richard A. Magee.

Young plans on marketing "Crime and Punishment" on a syndicated basis — that is by selling to individual stations.

"That is about the only free TV market left," he said. "Most of the market is controlled by the networks."

Aid In State Hospital

On Wednesday night, November 30, a group of 30 girls from Kappa Alpha Theta gave up three hours of their time to participate in a volunteer program at North-ampton State Hospital. The group was coordinated by Ruth Mac-Cloud of KAT and Norm Sharp, group leader of the volunteer program for Northampton hospi-

The program consisted of short speech by the director of volunteers, during which the The-tas were told of the values of volunteer programs. It was point-ed out that the mental hygiene movement has gained a great deal of its strength from volunteer work and funds. Since World War Two, popular interest in mental health activities has reached unprecedented proportions.

Magazine articles and books on the inadequacy of our mental hospitals, on the extent and ser-iousness of mental illness in the United States, and the need for community action to provide funds and personnel have led to responsive action by an increas-ing number of community organ-izations—the Red Cross, women's clubs, civic welfare committees, parent-teacher associations, and

After being informed of a few basic rules of volunteer work, the group from KAT went to an all women's ward where they en-gaged in all regular activities of volunteer work. Ruth MacCleod later explained, "the first horror of working with mental patients quickly changed to a sympathetic understanding of them as human beings." Norm Sharp added, "A program such as the one with KAT serves two important functions. First, the good that is done to the patients. It should be re-membered that some patients membered that some patients have not had visitors for 5, 10, or more years. Secondly, there is a popular notion that the inmates of mental hospitals are a weird lot who spend their time cutting out paper dolls, posing as Napoleon, or ranting and rav-ing. Programs of this sort allow the average man to realize that mental patients are practically in all respects average American citizens, undistinguishable from any others. Their only common denominators are nervous symp toms or emotional problems which they can not handle themselves and for which they seek profes sional help."

Any individual wishing to participate in a volunteer program can do so by simply being present in the Student Union lobby at

MEET THE PRES.—

The first public appearance and introduction of President John W. Lederle to the University community was at this fall's Homecoming rally. Since then, various groups and organizations on campus have had the opportunity to meet the president on a formal or informal basis.

Yet, because no opening convocation was held this year, the majority of the students have still to meet the president on an academic plane. Certainly a few introductory comments and remarks made at a football rally do not offer or suggest any first-hand image of the president—of the man who is heading the administration of an institution aimed at the development of "the potentialities . . . for pursuing truth and acquiring knowledge."

We are now being given the opportunity to meet, informally, President Lederle. Through the efforts of the Student Senate the first reception for the student body, and one of the first chances for most students to get to know and talk with the president, will be held tomorrow.

This reception is to be characterized by its informality. There is to be no hand-squeezing reception line, no pontificating, just good talk. More on the level of the bull session, it will be a chance for questions to be presented, problems pointed out, suggestions made.

Quite naturally, we heartily encourage everyone who is interested in the University to attend the reception. As President Lederle has repeated, he hopes to be the "most accessible" president this Univer-sity has had. It is our part to show the president, and onlookers, that we are seriously interested in the development, growth, and intellectual progress of UM. Student Senate leader, Dennis Twohig, concurs. He urges "every student to avail himself of the opportunity to meet with the president and discuss with him the future of the University." "We are," he added, "extremely fortunate in having as a president, a man who is desirous of being informed of student opinion."

Through this student-president reception, it is hoped that the spirit of our present administration will be captured. In past talks with President Lederle, members of the Collegian have found him very friendly and obliging. We look forward to a good showing during the hours of this reception: tomorrow morning from 11 to 12 and in the afternoon from 1 to 3, in the SU Colonial Lounge.

Since the beginning of his term, President Lederle has been confronted with all sorts of bureaucratic work, both administrative and legislative. At the same time it was necessary for him to cope with the ways and problems of the University unfamiliar to

The following are viewed as the major problems confronting the administration:

- 1. The problem of dormitory facilities which arises out of the University expansion policy.
 - 2. Student dining commons facilities.
- 3. An increase in faculty salary schedules. The overall issue is that of expansion both on the undergraduate and graduate levels.

ART: Second Place at UMass

Last week the retrospective exhibition of the works of Lee Gatch, contemporary American artist, opened in the Commonwealth Room

This particular collection of paintings came after more than one and a half years of effort on the part of the S.U. Arts and Music Committee to bring it to the University. Not only has this exhibition been an outstanding one for the campus, it has at-tracted the attention and brought to the University people from as far away as Boston

It is thus very disappointing, and almost ludicrous, that this exhibit must be taken down due to an important occasion on campus and because of the occupation of the Commonwealth Room by the Book Fair. Out of necessity the works of Gatch were hung scattered, on peg board, throughout Cape Cod Lounge. And not all of the 45 pieces could be hung due to the lack of space. This means, in short, that a part of a fine exhibit that merits a prominent display must be buried in the subterraneans of the

What can be concluded from this? We'd like to What can be concluded from this? We'd like to suggest that in order to be a cultural-intellectual center the University of Massachusetts must consider the possibilities for setting up a permanent gallery on campus. This proposed gallery would, almost undoubtedly, serve as a better place of display than the poorly lighted Commonwealth Room. It would, at the same time, be an incentive by which the University could begin to build up its own collection of art works.

Crown Supermarket And The Keeping Of Sunday

by PROF. LOREN P. BETH

At the request of the editors of the "Collegian," Professor Loren P. Beth of the Government Department has prepared the following essay presenting the pros and coms of the Sunday law cases now before the U.S. Supreme Court. Last year "The American Theory of Church and State", by Professor Beth, was published by the University of Florida Press.

In addition to the local interest in the Sunday Law cases, which arises from the fact that one of them concerns the Crown Supermarket in Springfield, the cases are also of importance because if the Court upholds the Sunday laws there will probably be attempts made to close down those businesses in the state which are now open on Sundays. On the other hand, if the Court should rule that Sunday closing legislation is unconstitutional, it would become difficult if not impossible to prevent the opening of almost all types of retail and service businesses—and we might even find that downtown department stores, in self-defense, would have to institute Sunday hours.

ARE SUNDAY LAWS CONSTITUTIONAL?

ARE SUNDAY LAWS CONSTITUTIONAL?

The issues can be divided into two major categories, the legal (constitutional), and the public policy (which may obviously include various moral considerations). From a constitutional standpoint the question is a simple one: Do Sunday laws, as such, violate the principle of separation of church and state which is implied in the clause prohibiting laws "respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof?" While the question is simple, the answer is not. For though Sunday the question is simple, the answer is not. For though Sunday laws were already in existence at the time of the writing of the Constitution, the First Amendment at that time applied only to the actions of the Federal government; it has been applied to state action only since the passage of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1867 and the adaptation of that Amendment's due process clause (in the 1920's) to the protection of individual liberties. (in the 1920's) to the protection of individual liberties

(in the 1920's) to the protection of individual liberties.

Since the Federal Government never had Sunday laws, it is possible to argue that they are outlawed by the First Amendment. In order to make this point one must—as in any constitutional argumentation—resort to the interpretation of phraseology which, on its face, can support various meanings. For this reason the constitutional argument which relies entirely on the plain meaning of the words of the document can never be conclusive, and arguments on the other side may be equally convincing. One may, indeed, resort to historical fact, tradition, or the actual legislation which has been considered acceptable in the past, thus proving that one's own point of view is prescriptively valid. The argument is never entirely convincing, however, for the needs and desires of societies are in constant flux and what was acceptable at one time may not be at another.

THE IMPORTANT QUESTIONS

For such reasons even lawyers arguing in court will usually go beyond the more strictly constitutional argument and resort to discussion of questions of public policy and morality. This is made even more likely by the obvious fact that what is constitutional in the presentation. tional is not necessarily wise, nor necessarily right either.

The really important arguments, then, will involve such questions as: Does a religious group (Christianity) by virtue of its majority status have a right to impose its will on the entire community; should the government use its legal force to back up such a group; to what extent should Sunday be considered as a religious day as opposed to being a popular and desirable day of rest and leisure; what would happen if Sunday laws were all abrogated; etc., etc.?

gious day as opposed to being a popular and desirable day of rest and leisure; what would happen if Sunday laws were all abrogated; etc., etc.?

PRO AND CON ARGUMENTS

On the side favoring Sunday laws are two major groups: the state governments (including their local units) and various church groups. Slightly different arguments will be used by the two. The state will doubtless place its major reliance on the theory that Sunday laws are a legitimate exercise of its police power to protect the health, safety and welfare of its citizens. The use of Sunday as a legal holiday, it will be said, is merely a recognition of the fact that it is desirable for people to have a day free of the normal work requirements. Opponents of the Sunday closing (other religious groups and also what religionists are fond of referring to as "secular thinkers") will rejoin that people can have a day of rest without legislating one particular day; that it seems oddly coincidental—if a day of rest is all that is involved— that the day chosen happens to be the Christian Sabbath; and there are so many exceptions to the Sunday closing laws (such as resort concessions, service stations, tranportation and medical services and drug stores) that the argument that a single specified day of rest is needed becomes obviously fallacious.

Religious groups will obviously take what support they can from the state's argument; but they will add—from their own concerns—that after all the United States (or Massachusetts) is, as it always has been, overwhelmingly Christian, and that there is nothing undesirable about official recognition of this fact where something so harmless as a day of rest is involved. The churches are extremely worried about the possible elimination of Sunday tesms from a perfectly understandable (and perfectly self-centered) feeling that the more businesses are open on Sunday the fewer people will be in the church auditorium on Sunday morning. If they argue that Sunday closing is enjoined by the principles of their religion, they are

REGARDING CLOSED STACKS

Amherst November 30, 1960

To the Editor:

I would like to answer some of the questions you raised in your editorial remarks of November 30 concerning the closed stack system. It is true that an individual can no longer roam the stacks casually examining, reading and walking out with "interesting" volumes. The assistant librarian tells you she "cannot find the book you requested" because someone else was browsing before the stacks were closed, and found it first. The only trouble is that he neglected to charge it out. Therefore the taxpayers have contributed to his private library and you cannot use the book. If you doubt the extent of book pilferage, just look at the number of uncharged volumes recovered in the search made of campus residences each spring by our bastions of law. These are only a small part of the books that have disappeared from open stacks. disappeared from open stacks.

The door check system is perhaps the answer to the whole problem and that assistant who brings such discouraging news could let you discover for yourself that the book is missing and act as a door checker. There is a real problem still to be solved though. Who is going to put in order the volumes which have been inaccurately shelved by "browsers"? As a former assistant under the open stacks. As a former assistant under the open stack system, I can testify to the time involved in shelf reading and stack straightening. The Dewey Decimal system is not very helpful when a "browser" puts 356 Ac is not very helpful wh right next to 375.76D,

Sincerely, Anna H. Frugoli

The "secular thinker" may add that the evolution of modern business—with the shorter work week (enforced by law in many cases)—has made the "day of rest" argument obsolete: for everyone nowadays has a day of rest and more people have two. They will argue, as well, that businesses can be organized so that most of their workers could still have most Sundays off even if the businesses themselves were open on Sunday—and, additionally, that there is little prospect that business other than the service and retail trades would ever open Sundays anyway. In short, they would doubt that the elimination of Sunday laws need seriously reduce church attendance.

such are, in brief, the major points in controversy. One other may be mentioned: the difficulty of enforcing Sunday laws in the local community. Everyone is familiar with the fact that, locally, the police often tacitly permit the opening of certain businesses which are legally required to stay closed. One may question whether such a situation does not detract from the respect for law which is necessary in any orderly society.

THE SUPREME COURT DECISION

THE SUPREME COURT DECISION

The courts will be required to weigh all these arguments, and then to try to put their conclusions into a constitutional framework so that they can end up by saying—logically and convincing-ly—that Sunday closing is, or is not, a violation of the Constitution. It is impossible to predict with certainty what the Supreme Court will decide, although it is safe to say that, whatever the decision, there will be dissenters on the Court who will be deeply dissatisfied—and obviously, the proponents and opponents of Sunday laws (outside the Court) will go on arguing. But after the decision is made they will have one more thing to argue about: the decision itself.

CA To Show Luther Movie Tues. Dec. 6

The Christian Assoication is ponsoring a showing of the fulllength motion picture Martin Luther Tuesday night, December 6 at 7:00 p.m. in the Public Health Auditorium. There will be no admission charge.

The film was produced by the Louis de Rochemont Associates for the Lutheran Church Pro-ductions, Inc. and was released to commerical movie houses in 1949. It has won wide critical acclaim for its accuracy and its dramatic power.

The life of Martin Luther is told in the film beginning at the time of his student days, through his priesthood in the Roman Catholic Church, the ninety-seven theses, his attempt to reform the church from within and his appearance before the Diet of Worms with his famous comment, "Here I stand; I can do no other. God help me." Among the technical advisors for the film was Prof. Roland H. Bainton of Yale whose biography of Luther, Here I Stand won the Abingdon Book Award and was acclaimed by the Saturday Review as the best Luther biography in any language.

THE UMASS INTERROGATOR

A Campus Opinion Poll by BARBARA YETWIN '64

Until the beginning of Novem ber, Freshman women conformed to a seven o'clock curfew on week days; they now have a ten-thirty curfew, as do the other women students living on campus. Com-plaints have been registered not only against the curfews, but also against the "one minute rush" against the "one minute rush" to sign in resulting from the reg-ulation which states that five minutes lateness can mean the loss of a Friday night late cur-few, and that ten minutes against a woman student can mean her being confined to the dorm on Saturday night.

The Interrogator now looks to the students to answer the question: Do you feel that these varicurfews imposed on women students are entirely just?

Three Freshmen, part of the large group who found themselves faced with these curfews, reacted in a similar manner to the ques

Faith Taylor '64, who is living Knowlton House, said, "Yes, I at Knowlton House, said, "Yes, I think the ones now are entirely just. The hours aren't that strict. If I were home, I'd be in just as early, and besides, it's entirely necessary.

Merna Smith '64 stated very simply, "Everything but the sev-en o'clock curfew is fine."

Louise Elkind '64, from Long Island, had a bit more to say. "Yes. Just about the most exasperating thing I've run in to on this campus. The hours them-selves are quite reasonable, but being so strict about one or two minute lateness is absolutely ab-

Opinions from other members the student body varied to some degree.

John Getter '61 was in favor of doing away with the curfews.
"No. The curfew seems relatively unnecessary.

"At home, the girls are given a nance to regulate their own "At home, the girls are given a chance to regulate their own hours, they are usually reasonable. This is college, composed of mature, 17-22 year old women, who should have a sense of right and wrong learned from home life. There are, of course, exceptions to this rule. What are we doing, giving curfews to control the exceptions to the rule? Even the exceptions to the rule? Even in this case, only the girls have the curfew. If anything, the boys need a curfew more than need a curfew more than the girls. The girls mature faster and know how to use their good sense by the time they reach college

Sandy Tomlinson '62, an education major from New York, stated laughingly, "Whatever you can do after curfew, you can do before curfew."

Richard Valentinetti '63, co rered before a chemistry quiz replied, "Weekend curfews are just, but on weekdays, they should be extended and the li-brary kept open."

Philip Fisher '64, who played one of the leading roles in "Look Homeward Angel," had an inter-esting answer. "Yes. It's not nec-essary for the women, the curfew is more for the men. It's a forced form of respect, but a good one

Redmen Hoop Squad Drops UMass Skaters Fight Two To Kent and Syracuse

Fouls Costly To UMass Chances; Grutchfield Stars

The 1960-'61 UMass basketball season began with a whimper rather than a bang as the Redmen dropped two games at the Kent

oach Matt Zunic's crew dropped the first one to the hosts, Kent State, as the latter ran up a 78-53 victory, Friday night. The second loss came in a consolation match against Syracuse University, one of the teams on the reg-ular UMass schedule, 74-61, Sat-urday night.

urday night.

The only bright spots for the Massmen were the shooting performances of Doug Grutchfield, and Mike Mole. Doug hit for 20 points in the first game, and 15 in the second, while Mike dropped in a total of 14 points in the Systems motth.

Aside from a few moments at the start of the Kent game, the Redmen were never in the lead. Kent State had full control of the boards, and came through with superior marksmanship as it trav-eled to a 21-11 lead at the end of ten minutes of play.

The Mass hoopsters within six points at 25-19, but Hal Estis dropped four long jump shots to break the game wide open, and Kent went on to 42-26 margin at the half, and the ultimate victory.

LOSE ON FOULS

It was a different story with Syracuse, as the Redmen played better ball than they had against their conquerors, losing the game on fouls. Syracuse sank 34 foul shots, including 22 of 24 in the second half, and that was enough to defeat their opponents. defeat their opponents.

UMass had a 56-52 lead thanks to two baskets by Mike Mole with just less than ten minutes left to play. At that point, Doug Grutch-field fouled out.

Syracuse then went on to out-class the Redmen 20-1, mostly with foul shots, to take over the lead with only 35 seconds left to play. UM's only point was a foul by sophomore center Don Black will be an important meeting of all people interest-ed in going out for lacrosse Tuesday evening at 8:15 in room 14 of the Cage.

The next game for the hoop-sters will be next Wednesday night at Boston University.

Uncooperative Weather

by DAVE WILLARD '64
With the coming of cold weath- front there er one can be sure that hockey isn't too far behind. As far as hockey coach Steve Kosakowski concerned Old Man Winter couldn't come too soon, for the unseasonably warm weather has prevented the forming of solid ice. But in the never ceasing struggle between men and nature Kosakowski has not conceded, as he has taken his charges down to the Deerfield Academy rink where they have been working out.

The main problem is that they have been able to hold only three practices and their first game is tomorrow night. This lack of con ditioning is bound to show, but the coach is hoping that after the boys get a few games under their belts they'll be ready for the top competition they are scheduled to

Taking a look at some of the talent the coach has to work with we see that it consists predominantly of juniors and seniors. Up front there is Frank Gilliatt, one of the few sophomores on the club. Other players vying for the forward positions are; Tom Taylor, Art Stevens, Charlie Donovan, Bob Glew, Jim Ellingwood and Dick Alger. On defense are Warren Basset, Bill Ryan, Red Forbush, Red Clinton and Dave Kennedy, two sophomores. The Kennedy, two sophomor two goalies are Frank and captain Bob Roland. Frank Cesario

Coach Kosakowski is quite hopeful of improving on last years 5-13 record, and with a few more practices, a few breaks, and a little bit of luck the determined coach might just do it.

So let's see all of you down at the Amherst rink at 7:00 P.M. Tuesday when the UMass sextet takes on AIC. Dress warmly and don't forget your ID's.

Freshman Quintet Ready, Waiting For Big Season

Height, good overall speed, and solid bench support hold promise of a big year for freshman b ketball and Coach Richard Garber.

No less than eighteen frosh ar to make the starting five. All but two are six-footers. At present, Coach Garber feels his team is at least two deep in strength in each position.

Three towering pivot men, Franz Van Bradsky (6'8"), Karl Saila (6'7"), and Tom Grazonlis (6'5") are all candidates for the center spot.

Leading hopefuls for forward spots are Roger Twitchell (6'5"), Mike Johnson (6'3"), Danny Laakso (6'3") and Elliot Gventer (6'4"). Johnson and Gventer are top notch rebounders, while Twitchell and Laakso provide good scoring power.

The group that will be directing the big men on the court in the guard slots includes Jim Payinter, who is pretty big himself at 63", and who has a deadly jump shot, Bob Jilinson, a clever six foot ball handler, Noel Baxter (6'2"), an excellent driver, and five-foot-nine-inch Pete Bernard, a hustler with quick hands.

All of these boys were stars for their high school teams, and Gar-ber's task is to get them to work together as a team. Their big test will come in the two encounters with the UConn freshmen, who are expected to be as big and as fast as the Mass hoopsters.

The season opener is this Wednesday at 4:00 p.m. in the cage when Stockbridge takes the floor against the tall and speedy frosh.

Gymnastics Team Opens Season With Win Over Cortland State

by JIM E. MULCAHY

Saturday afternoon a much pressured UMass Gymnastics team came from behind on the last two of six events to beat the team from Cortland, New York. four judges awarded the Teachers a 26 to 22 lead after the first three events. Following a brief intermission, allowing the athletes to limber up, Cortland's Sherman, who missed on his first try, climbed the rope in 5.9 seconds to edge out Don Cleary '61. Cleary's second, 6.0 seconds, and Jim Bitgood's '61 third gave us 7 points to 9 for Cortland.

The chance of Cortland coming up with its first win over UMass was lessened by a sweep of the parallel bars event. Lee Munson '63 first, followed by Bruce Mc-Cracken '63 second, commanded undivided attention; but complete silence fell on the Curry Hicks Cage as little Charlie Paydos '62 mounted the bars for a short but perfectly executed routine, which clinched third place and the sweep. A finishing blow was dealt the teachers by the Bosco-men as Paydos and Bitgood took first and second in the flying poor note for UMass as Dave Amundsen '62, our first tumbler, couldn't keep his balance. Our top scoring tumbler Gary Hagopian '61 added a humorous note to the score as he executed a re-sounding "fanny" flop. A pro-mise of things to come was dis-played by Dave Yates '63, who will be eligible next semester. The light Yates performed the tumbling routines like an animated windmill seeming to have a foot always ready to propel him into his next move.

Jim Adam '62 proved to be in top shape as he led off for us on the side horse. His fine performance was overtaken by the swift, light-legged Petrocino, who registered a first for Cortland. registered a first for Cortland.
The surprise of the event was the fifth place win for UMass by Bob Sloan '63, Earlier in the week coach Jim Bosco noticed Sloan performing on the side horse and asked him why he wasn't out for the gym team. Sloan replied that he had nuttered around but that he had puttered around but that he wasn't good enough for the team. His showing today proves his inaccuracy or modesty

Friendly Relation

At the conclusion of the meet ae relationship between these athletes was exemplified by the desire to teach and learn the finer moves of the opposition.

The officials are also a close group of men who are all interested in physical fitness and gymnastics. Head judge Dr. Werner Hass a history professor at Springfield competed internationally for Australia in the late 1940's and early 50's. Dr. Harold Childes, also at Springfield, was a gymnast at Cortland and now teaches health and phys. ed. a gymnu-teaches health and phys. ed. After the first man in each event has performed they come together from the perimeter of the event to evaluate the first performer. The score given the first man is the basis for the score for the following five men.

SPORTSENSE

All did not go well for the UMass hoop squad last weekend as they lost two games in Ohio. The first loss, at the hand State, wasn't as hard to swallow as the one to Syracuse, for the second defeat came when Syracuse scored almost half of their points on foul shots.

Hal Estis, a 5'10" guard from the Bronx, N. Y., was the big man for the hosts with 21 points. He made good use of a pin-point jump shot throughout the game Estis is considered to be one of the finest defensive players in Kent State history. Despite their losses, the Massmen learned a good deal, and should be in better form when they take on BU, next Wednesday. The Terrier basket-ball squad will have five letter-men in its starting lineup. The Terriers, having won 14 and lost 10 a year ago, will be embarking on a 24 game schedule.

The final winner in the Kent State Tourney was Kent State, itself, defeating Clemson 79-65.

ODD ENDS

Back in the basketball world, the pessimistic UConn squad came through in true form to defeat AIC 78-56 in its season opener. The Huskie coach, Hugh Greer, usually has a long face at the beginning of the season, but it soon turns into a championship it soon turns into a championship grin towards the end.

A windup of the UMass Quarterback Club was held Friday night in the Union. All the coaches were present, along with Tom Delnickas and John Burgess, the UMass co-captains. Film highlights of the season were shown, and the team and coaches shown, and the team and coacnes each got a beanpot. Coach Stud-ley's was big enough to hold a ten year's supply.

By 1962, said Coach Studley, the Redmen ought to be playing such teams as Dartmouth, Bucknell and Rutgers, along with Holy Cross and Villanova. Here's hop-ing, coach.

THE STATE OF THE UNIVERSITY:

Gamble Says UMass Is 'Above Average'

by JACK BAPTISTA '61 Collegian Staff Reporter

Philip Lyle Gamble, Professor of Economics and head of the department, has been a faculty member at the University for 25 years.

In giving his views on the "State of the University", Prof. Gamble commented on outsiders' regard for the University. "We find that our best graduate students are admitted to the best universities where they do well. We know that we are sent lists of good candidates from the better universities when we ask for potential teachers. We are not offered the best men, but we are not scorned."

Gamble does not believe the Legislature expresses simpling con

Gamble does not believe the Legislature exercises crippling control over the university. "If it did, we could never have gown as much as we have."

Faculty Turnover Is Fairly Low Discussing faculty turnover at UMass, he stated that the Univer-Discussing faculty turnover at UMass, he stated that the University's rate is below the national average of comparable institutions. "There is no doubt that occasionally low faculty salaries and poor promotion policies—plus some people's opinion of the intellectual atmosphere here—have helped the prima donnas of our staff, including some very capable men, to become dissatisfied and want to leave. Experience on at least six other faculties indicates that these are standard complaints, frequently exaggerated."

Gamble stated he does not find the UMass faculty too small for the growing enrollment, but that it is "poorly distributed with a tremendous overemphasis upon agriculture".

Students Have Intellectual Outlook

Students Have Intellectual Outlook
Gamble stated an intellectual outlook is not lacking among the student body. "This is not to say that the intellectual outlook has captured every student in our student body. As long as we are a University with diverse groups, and as long as we mix into our student body groups of people interested in applications of science, and who are trying for non-degree work in courses that never meet on Saturday, we have a definite built-in anti-intellectual element to whom Friday night is another night to raise hell.

night is another night to raise hell.

"Of course, some students are complacent just as some faculty are complacent," he added.

Undergraduate School Needs Development

Discussing the direction of future emphasis at UMass, Gamble feels that the undergraduate program will be more important than the graduate program "if we are to do the job that the people of Massachusetts need to have done. We need to provide a place for the thousands of men and women who will be unable to get into the 'fixed enrollment Liberal Arts institutions,' with which this region abounds."

Commenting on the College of Agriculture, he asserted, "I do not know whether or not the College will be maintained at UMass, but I certainly favor the establishment of a single New England institution, and the curtailment of the facilities here, because an industrial state with no more than 6,000 families making $5,000 a year gross income should not be spending millions on agriculture."

Higher Level Can Be Reached
In concluding his survey of UMass' present situation, Prof. Gamble stated that "the University's high point at present is found in a spirit of accomplishment of an institution on the move, and of an in-spirit of accomplishment of an institution on the move, and of an increasingly able undergraduate student body.

"Its major shortcoming is found in the poor quality of teaching in some of our departments where students can get A's without even buying the textbook, due to the nature of multiple choice and true-false examinations. Making a check with a pencil for a machine to score is not the equivalent of writing a report.

"My overall impression is that we are doing a better than average job for better than average students, but we are far short of perfection of the level of attainment we could reach with our present budget, students, and faculty position.

budget, students, and faculty position.

"Change cannot be made overnight, but we certainly can set out to change the public image of this institution as a place of underpaid faculty, filled with student playboys and playgirls, loafing their way through four years on the taxpayers' dollars."

Senior Class Will Discuss Money For Class Reunion

A motion which would, if approved, ask each member of the senior class to contribute $3. towards the class's 25th Reunion Gift, to be collected on the second semester bill, will come up at the senior class meeting at 11 a.m. tomorrow in the SU Ballroom, according to the Class Executive Committee.

Executive Committee members said the motion is intended to collect an equal amount from each senior, rather than having half the class give $5. or $10. and the other half give nothing.

The motion was passed unanimously by the Executive Committee last night.

The only other topic scheduled for discussion at Thursday's meeting is what the class will give the University this June. Roger Riikonen, Class president, expressed a desire to hear suggestions from the floor.

Flexible Strategy Suggested In Talk By Admiral Morison

1900-1941 Was Least Successful

Morison called the 1900 to 1941
"the least successful in U.S.

Japan was becoming stronger, and China weaker. Our strategy was to control the Philippines, protect a unified China, and dis-courage Japanese expansion. The U.S. attempted a policy of U.S. attempted a policy of negotiation which failed. Mean-while, we failed to maintain adeof war we had "a two ocean war with a one ocean navy." The period closed with the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. Strategy Change Brought Victory

Until our forces could be built up, we played a defensive role in World War II. After our victory at Midway Island, strategy changed to the offensive. We successfully defeated Japan by our strategy of "leap-frogging over Japanese strong points, bold thrusts deep into enemy waters, and submarine attacks."

After giving a speech on U.S. strategy in the Pacific, Admiral Samuel E. Morison joins Dick Borges '62 and Peter Hefler '63 in an informal discussion in the Colonial Lounge. Samuel Eliot Morison, Professor Emeritus of Harward University, spoke on the "United States Strategy In the Pacific—1900 to the present" in the S.U. Ballroom Monday. Morison divided his speech into the periods: the first atomic era, which includes 1900-1941 and W.W. II, and the second atomic era or the "Eisenhower era". Lucille E. Johnson, a member of the class of 1963 from Worcester, Massachusetts, will be the featured soloist of the evening. Accompanied by the band, she will play Grieg's Concerto in A Minor.

Lucille has studied the piano for eleven years and is presently studying with Mr. Schwartz of the music department here at the University. A participant in the National Piano Playing Auditions for ten years, Lucille received her high school diploma in music from this organization in 1959.

While in high school, she was pianist for various school choruses, clubs and organizations as well as being active in the music of her church. She is now pianist for the University Cho-rale; other activities at the University include membership in Kappa Alpha Theta, the Chris-tian Association, the Special Events committee of the Student Union, the Precisionettes and the Ski Club.

In addition to the Piano Con-

The program is one of great variety and inter-est and one which will appeal to many different musical tastes.

O Holy Night!

... After Night After Night...

The Christmas spirit has descended upon our campus. The Student Union is decorated with silver paper, bright red bells, huge signs saying "Merry Christmas," and-best of all—an enormous tree in the lobby gaily adorned with lights, bulbs, and tinsel.

In addition to all this, we have the pleasure of hearing the beautiful songs and carols, traditional to the season, as we walk from our dormitories in the evening or as we study in our rooms at night.

"O Holy Night," and a host of others come to us each evening from a speaker located atop the engineering building. They play for us every night since Dec. 5, Dec. 6, Dec. 7, Dec. 8, Dec. 9, Dec. 10 . . .

At first we were grateful for the carols. We became captivated—in a way—by their beauty, forgot our work and our worries, and became filled with a genuine feeling for the season. Then we remembered last year-how the pleasurse we first felt from this music gradually diminished with each repeated playing of the songs. We remember that when we stepped out into the night two weeks after they had first started, either we were hardly aware of the carols or we thought, "Are they playing that one again?" The music had lost its effect and was, at times, actually annoying.

Those carols again!" someone said.

"Why, they sound nice!"

"Yes, but . . ."

DO YOU KNOW ABOUT HILC?

by MARTHA SANDROF '64

The University and Smith, Amherst and Mt. Holyoke Colleges may not have too much in common other than location, but they do have a library in common—the Hampshire Inter-Library Center—HILC library, as it is called. It is now located on the second level of the west wing of Goodell li-

Since last June when the center was at Mt. Holyoke li-ary, HILC consists mostly of serials (bound magazines) and sets of books, arranged by size on the shelves.

According to Mrs. Dan S. Collins, director of HILC, the library is "really very small, but," she says, "we're growing." In charge of HILC for the last five years, Mrs. Collins has now completed her first year as Director.

The library was incorporated in September of 1951; the ginal members were Smith, Amherst and Mt. Holyoke original members were Smith, Amherst and Mt. Holyoke colleges, while UMass was admitted in 1954. It is governed by a Board of Directors which includes the president, librarian, and one faculty member from each of the four colleges, plus the librarian of the Forbes library in Northamp-

HILC was started when the four colleges discovered that, basically, they all used about the same research materials, and that it was an unnecessary expense for each one to buy the same materials. So, they pooled together and this pooling resulted in HILC.

HILC library is now receiving more than 460 journals, with the current issues of most of them being routed to the three other colleges by messenger once a month. There they are displayed in the libraries of the colleges for one month. The University does not display these journals because, according to Mr. Hugh Montgomery, head librarian of Goodell library, HILC is located on these premises—the material is here all the time.

The library is primarily for the use of faculty members and graduate students of the four colleges, although undergraduates may use it when they can't find material they need

Beside serials and sets, HILC also contains a sizeable lection of micro-film material and is growing at a fast e. Micro-film quantity reproduction of printed material saves much space, and at the same time the accession of more material is made possible. One of the most interesting sets recently received by the library is a series put out by the American Antiquarian Society of Worcester, Mass. This series (in micro-print) will, when completed, contain all the books printed in the United States up to 1800. The series is now two-thirds of the way to completion. two-thirds of the way to completion

Figuratively speaking, HILC library showed a profit from sales of old books last year, the expenditures running to $22,475, with an income of $30,278.

One of the controversies that has arisen lately concerns the "Undergraduates Not Admitted" policy of Goodell Li-brary. HILC also has this policy; however, according to Mr. Montgomery, there are several valid reasons for this policy:

- 1) One of the differences between HILC and other libraries is the fact that all the books are shelved by size, and if anyone went down to look up a book or a journal he would never find it without help.
- The library is relatively small, with only twenty-eight seats available. However, a typing room and a micro-film room are being planned.
- 3) Since it is a research collection, the hours are quite different from those of any other library, and it is easier to send down for requested material twice a day instead of running back and forth during the limited time in which the li-

'Old Soldiers Never Die'

by MIKE PALTER '63

Mr. Samuel Eliot Morison is a fine scholar with a distinguished military career. This is perhaps a good combination for it combines the wisdom of the scholar with the power of the soldier. Yet, all too often the scholar succumbs to the soldier and there remains only a hard bitter militancy, the product of long and arduous years at the service of one's country.

For the first part of his speech, Mr. Morison was largely the scholar. His analysis of Pacific strategy was correct, concise, and interesting. However, Mr. Morison fell into the trap wherein many a soldier lies, namely, in his discussion of Nagasaki. While he maintained that the bombs were necessary, he did not differentiate between the relative necessities of each. Why?

Let us for the moment put off this question and turn our attention to Korea. Korea, as we know, was a costly "conflict". In the beginning we took a terrible beating (mainly because of stupidity and unpreparedness), but we finally drove the North Koreans back. Mr. Morison, in his speech, clearly suggested the feasibility of using our atomic bombs in Korea. Of course, he was speaking in terms of military feasibility. Or was he?

It appears that he is in favor of "walking softly and using the big stick", that is, if the other person hasn't got one. Here we have the soldier.—Fall in, men.—

On the subject of deterrents, Mr. Morison is an eloquent On the subject of deterrents, Mr. Morison is an eloquent speaker. He particularly stressed the great value of the missile-firing submarine. Although Mr. Morison proposes to be an optimist in respect to future world peace, I suggest that he should not be, since a "stalemate" caused by high-powered deterrents is dangerous in that it is unstable and terribly insecure. The real proof of the pudding, however, comes when Mr. Morison first suggests that peace can only come if the Soviet Union will renounce its aims of world dominance and be content to operate its ideas of communism within its present area. Next, he suggests that by patient diplomacy, ecoent area. Next, he suggests that by patient diplomacy, economic aid, and military missions we could win the new nations of Africa and Southeast Asia to our side.

What does winning them to our side mean? Does it mean capitalism, etc.?

I suggest that the proper action for the U.S. is to insure the sovereignty and independence of these nations (both economic and political) and not try to "win" these nations to our side. This has been a weak point of our foreign policy, especially in regard to economic matters.

Mr. Morison is a wonderful scholar. He is, however, just as much a soldier

Inter-Dormitory Council

To the Editor:

The Administration and men students have long felt the need for an Inter-Dormitory Council to help solve the communal problems of the dormitories and to properly and uniformly channel their opinions and needs as a group. The annual S.W.A.P. Conference of Spring 1960 expressed its opinion that the time was auspicious to formulate such an experience for the organization for the men students. Mr. William Burkhardt, together with the Heads of Men's Residences, have given their wholehearted support and sanction to the idea. It is now up to the men students to help formally organize the actual Council. An Inter-Dormitory Council Committee has been appointed to guide the formulation of this newly proposed

In this open letter, we cordially invite all interested men students living in University dormitories to meet with the House Presidents, the Inter-Dormitory Council Committee, and Mr. Burkhardt, on Thursday, December 8, 1960, in the Franklin Room of the Student Union at 8:00 p.m. to officially discuss and formulate the Inter-Dormitory Council for Men Students. We look forward to your interest and cooperation.

Promotions Properly Prompted?

To the Editor:

I would love to know how the devil the Armor R.O.T.C. ose rank promotions. Do they turn a roulette wheel or pick names from a hat? Truly deserving people must lose faith in the University's military program when they view the injustices posted on the bulltein board. People who have more than 27 demerits and have been receiving low grades in the exams have been promoted while those with A's and a clean sheet have been ignored. At the rate the Armor is going, we should have a Colonel Bozo in charge of the R.O.T.C. department.

'TIS THE SEASON TO BE JOLLY

If you have been reading this column—and I hope you have; I mean I genuinely and sincerely hope so; I mean it does not profit me one farthing whether you read this column or not; I mean I am paid every week by the makers of Marlboro and my stipend is not altered in any particular by the number of be people who read or fail to read this column—an act of generosity totally typical, you would say, if you knew the makers of Marlboro as I know the makers of Marlboro; I mean here are tobacconists gray at the temples and full of honors who approach tobacconsts gray at the temples and full of honors who approach their art as ingenuously, as eagerly, as trustingly as the youngest and most innocent of practitioners; I mean the purpose of the Marlboro makers is simply to put the best of all possible filters behind the best of all possible tobaccos and then go, head high, into the market place with their product, confident that the inborn sense of right and wrong, of good and bad, of shoddy and meritorious, which is the birthright of every American, will result in a modest return to themselves for their long hours and result in a modest return to themselves for their long hours and dedicated labors-not, let me hasten to add, that money is of prime consideration to the makers of Marlboro; all these simple men require is plain, nourishing food, plenty of Marlboros, and the knowledge they have scattered a bit of sunshine into the lives of smokers everywhere; if, I say, you have been reading this column, you may remember that last week we started a discussion of what to give our friends for Christmas.

We agreed, of course, to give cartons of Marlboro to everyone know or would like to know. Today let us look into some other welcome gifts.

Do you know someone who is interested in American history? If so, he will surely appreciate a statuette of Millard Fillmore with a clock in the stomach. (Mr. Fillmore, incidentally, was the only American president with a clock in his stomach. James K. Polk had a stemwinder in his head and William Henry Harrison chimed the quarter-hour, but only Mr. Fillmore, of all our chief executives, had a clock in his stomach. Franklin Pierce had a sweep second hand and Zachary Taylor had seven-teen jewels and Martin Van Buren ticked, but, I repeat, Mr. Fillmore, and Mr. Fillmore alone, had a clock in his stomach. Some say that Mr. Fillmore was also the first president with power steering, but most historians assign this distinction to Chester A. Arthur. However, it has been established beyond a doubt that Mr. Fillmore was the first president with central heating. No wonder they called him Old Hickory!)

But Lidgress To get back to wake was also.

But I digress. To get back to welcome and unusual Christmas gifts, here's one that's sure to please—a gift certificate from the American Chiropractic Society. Accompanying each certificate is this fetching little poem

Merry Christmas, Happy New Year, Joyous sacro-iliac! May your spine forever shine Blessings on your aching back.
May your lumbar ne'er grow number
May your backbone ne'er dislodge, May your caudal never dawdle, Joyeux Noel! Heureux massage!

And greetings of the season from Mariboro's newest partner in pleasure, the unfiltered, all-new, king-size Philip Morris Commander. At Yuletide, at any tide, welcome aboard!

abiding hatred for the bottom crust of rye bread. There is no particular reason for making this point, except that whenever I think of Fort Lauderdale, I think of rye bread. There is no particular reason for that either, but I have been thinking of Fort Lauderdale. Fort Lauderdale is "where the boys are." Right now, that is. Most of the time, serenity reigns in Fort Lauderdale. (The Chamber of Commerce will hate me; they say it never rains in Fort Lauderdale.) But, for two weeks, twenty thousand collegians descend on this peaceful community and take it apart, peace by peace. They call it Spring Vacation, but it's more like amateur night at Cape Canaveral. They capture Florida and throw the Keys away. But I shouldn't joke—not while people are holding mass prayer meetings for an early hurricane season.

This is "where the boys are." And girls, too. Such girls, it makes you dizzy to look at them. If you look long enough, you reach an advanced stage of dizziness called aphrodizzier. It's like being in love. That's what happened to me, and it will happen to you, too. Everywhere you turn — beaches full of them, motels and hotels full of them, cars full of them, pools full of them, bathing suits full of them. Ah, bathing suits ... when the man said, "It's the little things in life that count," he must have been thinking of bathing suits. But mostly, it's the girls.

Girls in love, girls in trouble, bright guits. But mostly, it's the girls.

Girls in love, girls in trouble, bright girls with a future, not-so-bright girls with a past, rich girls in the lap of luxury, poor girls in any lap that'll have them, girls of every size and discretion. It isn't any wonder that this is "where the boys are." And the things that happen are wacky and wild and wicked and warmly wonderful "where the boys are." Someone should make a movie about it. Hey, someone did! M-G-M calls it "Where The Boys Are," starring Dolores Hart, George Hamilton, Yvette Mimieux, Jim Hutton, Barbara Nichols, Paula Prentiss, with Frank Gorshin and introducing popular recording star Connie Francis in her first screen role. With a team total of 1407 the Missouri School of Mines and Metallurgy was too much for the Stockbridge team of riflemen, particularly in the kneeling and standing positions. Best effort for the Stockbridge men was Cie-sluk's 270, but this was topped by all members of the Missouri team. Stenberg started out well in the prone and kneeling positions, but again ran into trouble trying to stay with the bull's-eye in the standing position, as did Nelson.

QTV Edged Out Lambda Chi As Sig Ep Rolls Over PMD

Last Monday night was the official beginning of the 1960-61 Intramural Basketball season.

QTV EDGES LCA

In the closest and most hotly contested game of the night QTV edged out a 41-39 victory over

LCA.

It was a nip and tuck game through both halves with no team taking more than a five point lead at any one time. The big gun for QTV and the game was a fellow by the name of Pisoewski who dropped in twenty points. Other high scorers on QTV were Boraski with eight points and Doran with six. Doran with six.

Lambda Chi's O'Toole was high

UMass came out for the second UMass came out for the second period all fired up, determined to even the score. Even it they did, wasting little time as they scored in the first minute. Ellington came flying in on the left wing, gathering in a pass from Glue, and tucked the puck neatly in the upper corner of the net.

This served as a trigger for the UMass offense as they continously kept the pressure on in the AIC end. This finally paid off in a score at 7:06 of the period when Al Glue scored on a nifty Ellingpass from Ellingwood. Elling-wood had out-stickhandled two AIC defensemen in bringing the puck over the line and then shot a quick flip to Glue in front who picked it up and shot all in the same motion, past the helpless

Professor Thompson Lectures On Election

by THOMAS McMULLAN '64

"The South and the Election of 1960" was the subject of a lecture given at the S.U. by Professor J. M. Thompson of the History department. Thompson is visiting professor from the University of South Carolina

He stated that the South is "no longer in the bag for either party." While Southerners have traditional bonds with the Demo-cratic party many are "more at home with the Republicans on social and economic issues." Thompson said that the rising popularity of the Republicans in the South is due to the "basic conservatism" of the South and traditional bonds with the Demo changing economic conditions. However, Thompson warned that the change to a two party system

A Policy Of Deceit

by T. MARTIN '60

In attempts to master environment, themselves, and one another, men have pretty much settled upon truth as an expedient standard of communication. If we accept the premise that truth even now retains its importance, and if we accept the pronouncements of certain institutions as true, then we should be grievously dismayed by the discovery of a lie, and even more so by a policy of deceit, perpetrated by one of the more powerful and trusted of these in-stitutions. I shall attempt to demonstrate that such a situation of lies, does, however, exist. It is my opinion that this situation should dismay, and per-haps even frighten those with but a minimal interest in their own future.

In an official publication of the Department of the Army (FM 17-1, published in Aug. 1957, with changes published in Dec. 1959 and Sept. 1960), intended for use in the field and dealing with the effects of nuclear weapons upon passengers and crews of armored vehicles, we find the following collection

- . 14. "Their armor provides a significant degree of protection against the effects of atomic wea-
- 15. "In addition, they can move almost immediately into the area of ground zero because their armor provides significant protection against residual radiation." Par. 15
- Par. 186. "Protection Offered By Armored Vehicles a) General. Armored vehicles provide a sig-nificant degree of protection to personnel against the effects of nuclear weapons.
 - b) Tanks. A tank provides excellent protection for personnel within it...the tank provides excellent protection against nuclear radia-

I'm certain that this is heartening news to those military leaders who are enthusiastically planning for "limited" and "full-scale" nuclear carnage. However, let those of us who are curious about our fates inquire a bit further. Let us contrast these first statements to another made in a second official Arms ARMY RESEARCH VELOPMENT PROBLEMS GUIDE, VOLUME VIII. This second source was intended as a listing and description of problem areas which the Army is suggesting for consideration. It is apparent that the information it contains is accurate, in that it is intended as a starting point for scientific research. The pertinent statement is as follows (Author's Note: All the following italics are mine.): p. 22 Present armored vehicles are readily contaminated upon exposure to radiological environment and use of this equipment requires decontamination processes which result in lost time and increased operating costs. Present armor exposed to a high neutron bombardment produce high gamma radiation which in some cases may be more than the initial radia-tion from the bomb itself!!

We have here an obvious spoken and intended misrepresentation of the facts, an attempt to convince those unaware of the truth that they are in a safer situation than is actually the case. We have here an attempt to foist upon the soldier deceit and sham in the place of valor and patriotism. Lest the reader convince himself that this is an incident of little consequence, or an accidental statement of some rather obscure facts of little importance to himself, let me take a second statement from this same "PROBLEMS GUIDE." This one (from page 103) reads, "It has long been assumed that presentation of objective fact is the most effective propaganda. Empirical observation and practice now suggest that in some cultures this may not be valid. Requirement exists for new hypotheses on the relative effectiveness (over short-, mid-, and long-range periods) of overstatement, understatement and straight factual reporting among various cultural groupings; and on the effect of 'one-sided' versus 'two-sided' presentation of an issue."

Through the presentation of a specific example and a statement of practice and theory I have attempted to demonstrate that there exists a 'policy of deceit' in military circles. In-as-much-as it is not common practice to broadcast the acceptance of such procedures within a culture which rejects them, it is legitimate to assume that the practice is even more widespread than is suggested by the state ments I have presented. Which of us can say that his actions have not been instigated, directed and/or concluded by the machinations of the deceivers? Which of us can consider himself a free man?

Theater Highlights

JUDITH ST. JEAN '60

In view of the fact that there have been many exciting musical and theatrical events within the past week, this review will cover them collectively. To begin Saturday night with the IFC skits; they To begin Saturday night with the IFC skits; they were in some respects commendable, but in many cases the potential and ability of many individuals and houses in general was wasted on embarrassing scenes. It was interesting to note how many houses used music to dramatize an event. The skits should not be abandoned, but since their campus appeal is so strong they are obligated to be individually more conscientious. Buffy St. Marie was a well needed break in the program. She entertained very admirably to the delight of the masses which filled Bowker. Not to be overlooked was Don McKeag, the master of ceremonies, who conducted Story time master of ceremonies, who conducted Story between scene changes

IFC SING

To proceed, the next event was the IFC sing Sunday afternoon. Perhaps the fraternities take this event with more seriousness than the skits, but it was an event which showed them at their best. The fraternities looked and performed with the dignity complimentary to the fraternity which is complimentary to the fraternity system. Congratulations to Tau Epsilon Phi, TKE and S Phi

MR. SCHWARTZ ON THE PIANO

MR. SCHWARTZ ON THE PIANO
Monday night in Bartlett Auditorium Mr.
Schwartz of the music department presented an excellent piano recital. This was the first concert of the year in the new auditorium which is very well constructed for such events. Mr. Schwartz is a man of no mean ability and his concert, although sparsely attended, was very commendable. He played several piano classics and devoted the last half of the concert to modern selections. He displayed a great understanding of the music of contemporary comcert to modern selections. He displayed a great un-derstanding of the music of contemporary com-posers, playing selections by Vaughn Williams, Prokofiev, and Schwartz. His own selections were from what he calls his earlier period. These pieces gave a brief example of his potential as a contem-

SORORITY SING AND DECLAMATION CONTEST The sororities took the stage last night in Bow-to present a very exciting evening of singing dramatization. All of the sororities obviously and dramatization. All of the sororities obviously had worked very hard in preparation of this evening which was organized and presented with finesse. Nancy King took the prize for her excellent dramatization to the Phone Call. She is a very talented Name of the Prize for her excellent drama-tization to the Phone Call. She is a very talented young lady and should be seen more often in campus events. Second prize went to Jayne Hayden who was recently seen in Look Homeward Angel. She was recently seen in Look Homeward Angel. She was also very commendable—in presenting an excerpt from A Raisin in the Sun. Third prize went to Wendy Russel for her version of the Chaucerian tale The Wife of Bath. The judges must have had a difficult time deciding the winners of the sing, since all of the houses showed talent and musicianship. One complaint of the sorority system is that much of its talent is hidden within the houses instead of being spread around to many of the fine musical groups on campus. Since this is not a very valid reason for abandoning the system, I will have to praise the sororities for an entertaining evening and reason for abandoning the system, I will have to praise the sororities for an entertaining evening and congratulate Sigma Kappa, Pi Reta Phi and Phi Delta Nu for their winning performances.

LOOK TO THE FUTURE

Now that the past has been discussed, a look into the future is in order. The Chorale will present its annual Christmas concert next Wednesday in Bowker Auditorium. Judging from its last concert this presentation should be well worth attending. It would be very gratifying to the Chorale if the student body would support this excellent choral group. would support this excellent choral group.

Indictment

To the Editor:

We have remained passive during the first part of this year while this "correct" has considered the constraint of the point where it can now afford to tolerate a self-appointed expert on everything.

We have remained passive during the first part of this year while this "corpert" has continued to the part of the year.

His witticism does not stop here, but spreads to include various departments and their personnel. Of course we are not saying that this omniscient deity does not have the constitutional right to express his opinions. If we said this we would be putting ourselves in his class.

The purpose of this letter is to state our doubts concerning the necessity of such an expert. Master Palter has been consistent in only one respect, namely his staunch belief that he is the physical embodiment of the intellectually curious and that he is the UMASS' bodiment of the intellectually curious and that he is the U Messiah who shall lead us to that great land-grant in the sky.

We do not feel that this pseudo-intellectual should be allowed to inue his rantings and frothings any longer. We feel that the we do not reel that this pseudo-interlectual should be allowed to continue his rantings and frothings any longer. We feel that the space could be just as adequately filled with a Bufferin ad and an accompanying picture, suitable for framing, of an upset stomach.

Naturally, these are only our humble opinions and if Mr. Palter feels that our criticisms are entirely unjust and that he is truly qualified to destructively criticize such men as Admiral Morison, professor emeritus of Harvard, and Colonel Weaver, a learned man concerning military history and stratagem, we will gladly retract our statement upon presentation of his several degrees and awards for academic superiority. It certainly is a shame that he was not around during World War II to aid the allied commanders. We are sure his vast knowledge of military methods would have hastened the end of this conflict.

Self-Vindication

Dear Sirs:

Dear Sirs:

It is unfortunate that you should be forced to question my character. In my columns I have written with humility. I have never been dogmatic. I have never claimed to be omniscient. However, Gentlemen, I have one failing; I am inquisitive.

Sometimes we are right and sometimes wrong; yet we are always inquisitive, searching, seeking truths and ideals. We may stumble into inaccuracies and falsities, yet we gradually surge forward. I have made mistakes, yet when I am confronted with the truth, I yield to 't and affirm its validity.

You state that I have ridiculed learned lecturers as well as various departments and their personnel. Let us consider your statement ous departments and their personnel. Let us consider your statement to better assess the validity of your argument.

I have never questioned the validity of Mr. Morison's or Colonel Weaver's statements in regard to stratagem. My criticism of Colonel Weaver in regard to military history was initially incorrect but I modified my stand on the basis of what I considered to be adequate documentation (i.e., Encyclopedia Brittanica). If my modifications didn't correspond to the Colonel's statements, it is simply because he and I used different documentation. In regard to this matter, I stand upon my final statements. upon my final statements.

With regard to my criticism of Mr. Morison, it is vitally important to realize that it was not based on strategic-error but on what I consider to be a negation of humanitarianism and morality. Far be it from me to suggest the immorality of Nagasaki for I am but a human being and do not understand. Far be it from me to criticize Mr. Morison's tacit approval of nuclear weapons in the Korean conflict, for I am but a human being and do not realize the worldwide consequences of this. Far be it from me to criticize Mr. Morison when he speaks of "winning" the new nations of Africa and Southeast Asia to our side, a concept which I believe is contrary to the United Nations Charter. Far be it from me to criticize Mr. Morison's opinions on deterrents. This is based on my conviction that the only deterrent to war is disarmament and my belief that the more Polarises we build, the more difficult it will be to disarm.

I suggest, gentlemen, that you have perverted the situation. You confuse stratagem with morality; ridicule with opinion.

As far as my criticism of "various" departments and their personnel is concerned, let me say that I have never consciously ridiculed personalities unless they were affiliated with departments which should be ridiculed, have been ridiculed for many years, and will be ridiculed for many more. This is perhaps prejudice on my part. Please forgive me, Gentlemen. I have read and seen too much about armies. I know what they are trained to do and I am acquainted with how they do it. More specifically, I know what they cultivate in the individual. One goes to West Point not to live but to kill. The great bulk goes to R.O.T.C. not to learn but to needlessly waste time. If, perchance, you believe it not to be needless, I suggest you observe a few classes. Although the Colonel disagrees with me on this, I respect his opinion. I, however, do not respect his affiliation with R.O.T.C. This is not a personal matter.

Thus, gentlemen, I write what I think, I am not a "Messiah" or

Dian Crocker Recently | Pinnings Returns From Europe

DIAN CROCKER

Welcome home to Dian Crocker, '63, who is now back at the University after a 17-day vacation through Europe.

The Boston Sunday Advertiser awarded this TWA jet trip through Italy, France, Monaco, and England to Dian for her winning essay submitted to the "My Ideal Man" contest. Rome, Perugia, Assisi, Florence, Pisa, Genoa, the Italian and the French Italian and the Rivieras, Nice, Paris, Versailles,

Monaco, and London were high-lights of her travels from October

Personally commenting on her rip, Dian remarked that she enjoyed her stay in Italy most be cause of the "outstanding friend-liness of the Italian people whose pride in their country and pre-vailing spirit of nationalism showed in their eagerness to share with the visitor." There seemed to be a greater opportu-nity to learn in Italy than in other European countries, Dian stated, for the Italian people were sincerely eager to teach visitors about their native land.

Among Dian's other favorities abroad were the city of Florence with its remarkable leatherwork, the famous "Mona Lisa" in the Louvre, the changing of guards at Buckingham palace, the church of St. Francis of Assisi, Italian food and music, and the famous wax display in London.

Dian, an English major who home is Weymouth, Massachusetts, hopes to return to Europe after graduation. In the near future she plans to show slides and discuss experiences of her trip abroad, at Leach House, where she resides.

Holiday Spirit Is Prevalent Throughout The Girls' Dorms

Decorations are being put up and plans are being made for the annual dorm Christmas parties. The freshmen will have an op-portunity to see many dorm tradi-tions being upheld. This Christmas spirit will afford to the men one of the rare opportunities to go above the first floor.

DWIGHT

Last Sunday morning, Dwight held it's first dorm breakfast. held it's first dorm breaklast. Fifty happy girls enjoyed coffee, donuts, and juice and looking forward to many more of these breakfasts. The Third Floor Short engineered this affair.

is proud to announce its nomination for Winter-Carni Queen. Good Luck Jane Ross.

e evening of December 9th is the time for Dwight's Tree Trim Trot. Hours have been spent fixing up rooms for Open House which will be followed by an informal party in the Rec Room. The girls and their dates are to cooperate in trimming our tree. Dancing and refreshments will follow.

Word has it that Maren biggest news of late in the halls of Dwight is the success of the "Secret Santas". Every girl is a "Secret Santa" to another girl and is supposed to another girl and is supposed to leave gifts, notes and clues as to her identity. December 14, the day of the Dorm Christmas Party, day of the Dorm Christmas Party, is the big day when each girl will find out who her Secret Santa is. Until then every Dwightite must keep on her best behavior. Remember—girls—Secret Santa is watching YOU.

THATCHER

Thatcher's annual dorm formal will be held this Saturday evening. This is a special event, for the girls are allowed to have their dates pick them up at their rooms.

Also in accordance with the spirit of Christmas, a dorm Christmas party will be held Wednesday, December 14. Santa wednesday, December 14. Santa is expect to arrive at 11:00 p.m. to deliver the gifts which he will collect from secret pals in the dorm. It is a tradition for coundorm. It is a tradition for con-selors, dressed as angels, to start caroling from the top floor, slowly proceeding to the r room as everyone follows them.

Recently, Thatcher was honored by the presence of Mr. Quint of the History department and Mr. Wilson of the Sociology depart-Wilson of the Sociology department at a tea. They discussed the Sophomore Colloquium with the freshman women. Three Thatcher girls, Catherine O'Connell, Elaine Chomyn, and Ruth Wallace represent Thatcher in this organization.

Hats off to Grace Fitzpatrick who attended a 4-H convention in Chicago last week.

Thatcher was honored to have its nominee Debbie Read, a counselor in the dorm, as one of the finalists for Honorary Colonel of the Military Ball.

LEWIS

Lewis North Lewis would like to congratulate Nancy Shaw on becoming a member of National Honor Society—Phi Kappa Phi. As a senior, she is now doing honors work in English. She has chosen a fine field—it can use her talents.

This coming Sunday, December, 11, from 3-5 p.m. Lewis will hold "Christmas Open House". Halls and walls will be decked in lovely Christmas array, symbolizing the growing seasonal spirit. The Twelve Days of Christmas, Greeting Card Creations, Santa's Vil-lage and a Christmas Toy Shop, are only a few of the many themes now under way. It will be a pleasure to welcome all visitors.

Greetings from all the girls, to Marilyn Kittila who has just returned from her week's stay in the infirmary. Nice to have you back, Marilyn.

This is the B-52. Advanced as it may be, this airplane has one thing in common with the first war galleys of ancient Egypt ... and with the air and space vehicles of the future. Someone must chart its course. Someone must navigate it.

For certain young men this presents a career of real executive opportunity. Here, perhaps you will have the chance to master a profession full of meaning, excitement and rewards...as a Navigator in the U.S. Air Force.

To qualify for Navigator training as an Aviation Cadet you must an American citizen between 19 and 261/2-single, healthy and intelligent. A high school diploma is required, but some college is highly irable. Successful completion of the training program leads to a commission as a Second Lieutenant ... and your Navigator wings.

UMass Quintet Topples Rugged Terriers, 61-59

by AL BERMAN '62, Sports Editor

The UMass Varsity Basketball team, led by the brilliant shooting of junior guard Mike Mole, stormed from behind in the last five minutes of play Wednesday night to defeat the Terriers of Boston University, 61-59, a gymnasium in Boston.

The game was a close, hardfought battle from the opening buzzer. The Redmen jumped off to an early lead, going ahead at one time by five points. The Ter-riers overcame the lead quickly, and from then on through the end of the first half, there was never more than two or three points difference between the scores, with the lead changing hands several times.

UMass was on top at midway point, 35-33.

TERRIERS TAKE LEAD

The Terriers came back in the second half to take the lead and retain it for nearly the remainder of the game. The game remained of the game. The game remained close, however, with B.U.'s lead ranging from one to three points for the first 12 minutes. Then, as UMass center Don Black fouled out of the game, the Terriers in-creased their lead to four points with about five minutes remain-

Things were looking pretty dim for the UMass five, when Mike Mole began a one man show. With the Redmen down, 45-46, Mike scored eight straight points, as he intercepted one B.U. pass and broke up several other plays. Mole's last-minute surge combined with the clutch foul shooting and excellent rebounding of Charlie Fohlin to project UMass into a 58-54 lead with about two

These devices are changing the scene at all our manufacturing plants as they go into the startling new communications products devel-oped by our associates at Bell Telephone Laboratories. From microwave transmission equipment to submarine cable amplifiers, our products call for creative production engineering, installation planning, and merchandising methods. Our job for the Bell System and the U.S. government has grown to the point where we are now one of the nation's "Top 11" in industrial sales. And your chance to play an important part in our future growth is solid!

Frosh Court Squad Defeats Aggies, 81-56

An opening layup and three foul tosses by Bob Johnson of Leominster helped jump the Braves off to a 7-1 lead. But sloppy ball handling by the Garbermen enabled the Aggies to close the gap to 13-9. This was the closest Stockbridge came to tying the score in the game.

Karl Saila, a 6'7" forward, and 6'5" Roger Twitchell provided the power under the boards as the little Redmen swept to a 38-17 half-time lead. Numerous fouls half-time lead. Nume kept the Aggies alive.

In the second half, lanky guard Jim Painten proved effective with his drives and long jump shots. Jim tied team-mate Bob Johnson in the scoring column with 14 points. Twitchell led all scorers with 15 while Ted Hyland and Denny Dowd led the losers with 13 and 12, respectively.

Against Wesleyan, Today

Behind the leadership of Coach Joe Rogers and Captain Dave Goldstein, the UMass swimming team will launch its 1960-61 sea-son against Wesleyan, today, at the opponents' pool.

The mermen will be hoping, this year, to better their last season's slate of 3-6. They will have to overcome the loss of a consistant winner, Ben Knight, who graduated last spring.

However, the team's other big winner, Matt Rutkowski, a junior from Waltham, will be back in action in the freestyle events.

The squad has many promising sophomores on its roster, yet with a nucleus of only three lettermen, anything can happen.

Captain Dave Goldstein will be leading the backstroke men, the others being Jack Sampson, and Jim Coppey.

Junior Dave Desjardins will compete in the breast stroke events, along with sophomore breast stroke Phil Laroche.

Rutkowski will swim with Dave Leith and Ron Chiras in the freestyle events, while Brendan O'Niell and Robert Burke are scheduled to compete in the individual events. George Fisette will do the butterfly for the squad.

Sophomores Frank DeFreitas, Eric Schuhle and Bruce Morton are in charge of the fancy diving.

The first home meet for the mermen will be on January 10 at the Women's Phys. Ed. Pool.

Wesley Foundation Presents Two One Act Play Readings

This evening at Wesley Methodist Church, the Wesley Foundation will present two one act plays, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

The first of these will be a short comedy called "Sweet and Twenty" which is a delightful affair between two lovers who meet at an old mansion which is for sale. They are accompanying people who have an interest in buying the place, but they them-selves have no interest whatsoever in real estate. The play takes place in the gardens where the two people meet and fall in love. It is a truly classic way in which they fall in love.

The second play is entitled "Winterset". This play has a strong philosophical and moral base to it. The theme centers around justice and love, the kind of love that both is willing to die for another and that learns for-giveness. The scene is set in winter amidst the cold and forlorn-ness of the streets of New York. The main characters are an innocent young girl and a boy who is in search of the truth in the frame-up execution of his father for the murder by another.

Dean Kirshen To Speak At Business Colloquium

The UMass School of Business Administration will sponsor the first in a series of colloque Tuesday December 13, 8:00 p.m. in the S.U. Middlesex room

Himy B. Kirshen, Dean of the UMass School of Business Admin-

Dean Kirshen came to UMass in 1957. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin, MA. from Columbia University and B.S. from Whitman College and B.S. from Whitman College. Qualitative Approach Is Discussed The topic of the talk will be: "Research in Business and Eco-nomics: What is left of the Qualitative Approach?" He has also been conducting some research in this area.

Quantitative Will Not Replace Qualitative

Dean Kirshen said, "My own theory is that the Quantitative ap-proach won't replace the qualitative approach. But it will make significant inroads in some phases of qualitative research." The public is invited to attend this colloqium. Students studying in the business areas or planning to enter the business fields are Important Areas

The reason for choosing this topic was to assess the impact of quantitative approach in business and how it would affect the qualitative approach. With the rise of computers in the last few years the quantitative approach has been gaining more and more in importance. Some people think it wil completely replace the qualitative because of the increasing use of computers and the improved models that are coming out. Dean Kirshen doesn't think this will happen and feels it important to point out in which areas the qualitative approach will continue to be of importance to his stu-dents.

National Chapter Initiated Tonight

Tonight at 8 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, the sisters of Gamma Chi Alpha will be pledged to Alpha Chi Omega.

The history of Gamma Chi Alpha started in September of 1958, when Jane Massimiano, President, realizing the need for more sororities on our growing campus, interested fourteen other members of the class of 1961 in the idea of forming a new soror-ity. On November 10, 1958, the first formal meeting was held. The constitution was drawn up and accepted by Dean Curtis and former President Mather in February of 1959, at which time the founders were initiated. Since that time the membership has more than quadrupled and now stands at sixty-seven. Negotia-tions for becoming national were begun during this past summer, the result being acceptance into Alpha Chi Omega on Monday, December 5.

Alpha Chi Omega has many chapters in the east, two in the New England area being at the University of Maine, the home of the first Gamma Chi Alpha, and at the University of New Hamp-shire. The UMass Chapter will be the 95th in the country.

All during its conception and formation, assistance and assurance has come from the Greek community, South College, and the campus at large. Unlimited help has been given by the advis-ors Miss Oreana Merriam, Mrs. Paul Agerwal and Mrs. Donald

Tonight the sisters will remove the red and green badges of Gam-ma Chi Alpha to don the diamondshaped pledge pins of Alpha Chi

Senior Class Assessed For Reunion Gift

by LARRY RAYNER

Collegian Editor-in-Chief The Senior Class yesterday voted to assess each of its members $3. to pay for the 25th Reunion Gift.

Passed unanimously by the Executive Committee Tuesday night, the motion was approved,

The money will be collected as part of the class tax on the second semester bill. In previous years, each member was asked to contribute $10., but less than 50 percent ever donated.

Theme For Winter Carni Announced By Committee

"A Little Bit of Yesteryear" has been chosen as the title and theme of the Winter Carnival Weekend. The winning theme was submitted by Charles Rock '63 of Baker Dorm, who will receive a free ticket to the Carni Ball.

The weekend is sponsored by the Class of '62.

Committee chairmen have been laying the foundation for what they hope will be UMass' biggest weekend. Heading up the general committees are Carol Veno and Fran Lovejoy, activities; Eddie Hazlett and Jack Wylde, ball; Pete Evans and Bernie Schultz, concert; Diane Coyle and Bill Hailer, weekend; and Fred Shotz, publicity. Ex officio are Bernie Murphy, class president, Charles Curtis, vice president, Debbie Read, treasurer, and Jean Havey, secretary. Faculty advisor is Dr. John van Steenberg.

Two hundred and fifty undergrads are helping to make this the most fun-filled Winter Carni. A real old fashioned weekend.

The Authors Met

Last week's "Meet the Author" series certainly serves praise and recognition for being one of the highlights of the first semester. It has, after only a period of three years, gained momentum and interest from students and faculty. And for those with a bent for writing and editing, the series of discussions undoubtedly inspired an enthusiasm for these

The entire program's high quality was maintained throughout each of the authors' discussions, with the climax coming on Friday when Mary Ellen Chase, current best-selling (The Lovely Ambition) novelist, spoke on her ideas for novel writing.

A cooperative enterprise of the English department and the S.U. Book Store—which ran the Book Fair in conjunction with the author series, "Meet the Author" seems to have become better and bet-ter, attracting a larger and larger audience since it started in 1958

The featured authors and editors included, on Monday, Arthur Mann, biographer of La Guardia and professor of history at Smith, and Thomas Copeland, the general editor of The Letters of Edmund Burke and a professor of English here at the University. On the succeeding days talked: the poet fiction editor George Starbuck who recently had published a volume of his poems titled "Bone Thoughts"; M. D. Elevitch, editor of First Person, a new type of magazine formulated out of the editor's aesthetic concept of magazine publishing. University-Smith College Chaplain, Rabbi Louis Ruchames discussed, on Thursday afternoon, the historical and social considerations to the John Brown incidents. Attracting the largest audience, Mary Ellen Chase spoke on the novel and the story form in writing, her "notions". Arthur Mann, in discussing the problems of the biographer of a man like La Guardia, said he had to revise his hypothesis of La Guardia as an Italian-American after delving into research and interviews His book La Guardia: A Fighter Against His me, not a life and times, he said, but a book "essential" man.

Dr. Copeland, as editor of Edmund Burke letters, viewed his experiences in research and editing in England.

George Starbuck pointed the way for writinghopefuls: how they might get their works published. He stated that the one sure way is by "writing good, clear English", that all good writing is marked by a "kind of energy and celerity". He concluded the hour by reading several of his witty poems.

M. D. Elevitch reviewed the various literary magazines now on the market pointing out how, in order to survive, they have had to "repeat" themselves, and have had to become a "business". This appears to be a good observation.

Institutionalization leads to degeneracy, mediocrity. For a magazine to recognize this and determinits policy by its antithesis seems noble. Elevitch thus says he determines the content of First Person by "artistic vision." He added, that once the magazine has served its purpose it should be dissolved.

Dr. Ruchames brought out the necessity for the writer of a book, such as the John Brown Reader, to evaluate, according to his own judgment, the accuracy and point of view of his sources.

And, Mary Ellen Chase's wit pleased her audience more than once as she discussed her approach to novel writing. She repeated several times that "the story is only a means to an end." The novel is not the story but the idea conviction of the writer. She pursued her topic with zest, and talked about wonders of the semi-colon, dash and question

This is only a tiny hint of the fine discussions was a gift of insights into literary aspects, both writing and publishing. All of the coffee hours were friendly and chatty, and many who attended called them an "inspiration."

Screen For Hills...

The administration has indeed acted visely in opening the "recreation room" of Hills House to study. Yet, it is important to realize why the room was closed in the first place. The principal reason, of course, was damage to the vending machines.

Although the room is now open, there is yet a protective screen for the machines. While commending the administration for opening the rooms we also urge a diligent effort, on behalf of those involved, for the procurement of the necessary protective

A REVIEW: Pete Seegar

by LORRAINE GELPEY '62

The standing ovation, cheers,

Seegar whose concert was co-consored by the Pioneer Valley colklore Society and the Hamp Sane Nuclear Policy, warmed everybody's cockles when, after a tussle with the microphone which didn't want to stay at the height to which he adjusted it (he wor little conflict with strong wrenching twist), he remarked that sometimes we can only win through "force and vio-nence." From then on it was all tun for Seegar and the rest of

The well-known and well-loved singer, who looks like the man next door or the fellow who runs

He played a twelve-string guitar, a five-string banjo and a soprano recorder. His selections ran the gamut from tender lullables and love-songs to a twere-string generally selections ran the gamut from tender lullables and love-songs to a wonderful folktale about a monster called Abeeyo-yo which he acted out to the huge delight of the audience. Many of his songs were protests of one sort or another. One of his lullables had a stanza about a stanza about a lovely whose eyes were being "pecked" by the bees and butlonely little lamb whose eyes were being "pecked" by the bees and but-terflies while he cried for his mammy. The song came from the South and was about the poor little colored baby whose mother had to leave him while she went to the "big house" to take care of the white folks' children. Another was written only last April during a four-day protest march from Aldemaster, England to Trefalgar Square in London. Aldemaster is the small town where the H-bomb was built, and the song, called "Marching to Trefalgar," had "That bomb has got to go"

Much of Pete Seegar's charm as a performer is his knack of getting his audience to participate in the singing of many of the songs. Friday's audience seemed a rather talented one and some good harmony as well as a good lot of spirited singing filled the hall and "made the walls resound with good fellowship."

How was the concert? Great!

Something New In Music

by EDWARD D. GALVIN '61

A new movement has started and is going along unnoticed by most. This movement has been anticipated and eagerly awaited by those who derive pleasure from listening to well written music played by modern jazz and classical musicians.

The combination of jazz and classical music is almost a natural and inevitable occurrence. Many compositions written and played in the jazz vein have been borrowed heavily from composers such as Brahms, Liszt, Schumann, and Chopin.

This new growth in music is now struggling for existence and acceptance. The combining of a jazz group or personality with a stringed orchestra has been recently attempted and is gaining strength from the consequent success.

Men with talent and imagination are available to promote this recent trend; some of the more accepted artists have, in fact, already produced many worthwhile results.

Such people of high regard as John Lewis, Leonard Bernstein, Dave Brubeck, and Miles Davis, for instance, have made note-worthy efforts to combine jazz and classical achievement. These people are well assisted by many others who will program a new degree in entertainment for those, like themselves, finding commercial programming and popular music, on the whole, distasteful.

It does not take a music critic to point out flaws in the recent attempts, and one must realize that certain problems are difficult to overcome. But one cannot deny the existence of great interest and talent flowing into this huge, unlimited field, which up to now has remained untouched.

I feel it necessary to list some of the recordings which represent the work being done. I cite two albums which do not resemble each other except for the fact that they fall into this cate-

The album "Sketches of Spain" featuring Miles Davis, on the trumpet, with an orchestra led by Gil Evans, is one such new jazz work. The second recording is "Bernstein plays Brubeck plays Bernstein", which employs the use of the Brubeck Quartet backed up by Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic.

After these first steps we must now wait, listen and judge the effect. The new concept has made its landing, but in establishing a foothold, it will find it's greatest degree of difficulty.

It is only those who wish to listen to accomplished talent pre-sented in a new manner, that will be at all interested in these new achievements toward a new jazz, toward a continuation of crea-tivity in music as a whole.

In Reply to Prof. Gamble

I would like to reply to Prof. Gamble's state of the University message in the following manner. First, since I do not attend Saturday classes at present because of my schedule, am I considered by him an anti-intellectual, and if so, since I plan to enter Graduate School next year could he suggest an institution that makes it a policy to have Satur-day classes so that I will not be considered a nonconformist?

It seems very unfair to choose a group of students who have the drive to attend school for two years without receiving any degree for his use as a scapegoat. What of the four year students who make Friday every night, or don't they count? And if applying science is wrong, then our rocket scientists must certainly be out on a cloud.

Secondly, the very fact that millions are spent on research for agriculture at the University certainly makes very clear the faith and confidence the con-tributing agencies have in our agricultural staff. Would they receive this amount if no value was being derived? With the formation of his so-called industrial state comes the problems of recreation for the workers, packaging and distribution of food to hungry mouths, and the beautifying of our remaining countrysides as examples. How can they be adequately solved for Massachusetts residents by a regionally located institution, say in Pennsylvania? It is hard for me to believe that he is now biting the hand that has made his life increasingly more pleasurable through the years.

New Rule at Baker Dorm

Last night, a new rule was presented to the members of Baker dorm by the Housing Committee. Because of the constant bedlam in the dorm (due to cause of the constant bedlam in the dorm (due to the seemingly perpetual vacation of our councilors); no student will be allowed, in the future, to open his door any longer than to dart through it (hoping not to be caught by a councilor and accused of holding the door open too long.) The penalty for such a crime, and a sign of insubordination, is more than a mere wrist slap. It is suspension from dormitory living for two days—an expensive proposition.

tory living for two days—an expensive proposition.

It is now obvious to me why the dorm is known as the "Animal House". It isn't that the students look or act like animals, it's just that they are treated like animals. Yes, we are animals. We must at all times keep our cage doors closed so that our ever-sleeping trainers won't have to work. Perhaps the councilors might try the new intercom for their noise-prevention.

Developing Creativity

"'Who, me? Why, I couldn't think of an idea if I tried.' This is a typical response when anyone is asked to attempt something original. Most of us completely lack confidence in our ability to create. We cling to the belief that we are born creative or non-creative and that nothing can be done about it.

This notion has recently been proved false. Courses conducted in colleges and industry over the past ten years have shown that creativity can be developed. For example, in one research project graduates of creative problem-solving classes at the University of Ruffale were paired against comparable students. were paired against comparable students who had not had the classes. The course-takers averaged 94% better than the others in ability to produce fresh and useful ideas.

REDMEN IN IMPRESSIVE 79-64 WIN OVER BRANDEIS

Grutchfield High With 28 Points, Major College Football Is Leslie Scores 19 In First Half

by AL COHEN '63

The Redmen varsity basketball cam unleashed a blistering 53-oint first half attack Saturday night and ultimately swamped the Brandeis Judges, 79-64, at Sha-piro Athletic Center in Waltham. Redmen forward Kirk Leslie from Pittsfield regained his scoring touch as he netted 19 points in the first half.

Brandeis led 6-4 early in the game, and was ahead again 8-7 a little later. Leslie then sunk two foul shots to send the Judges down for the last time

MANY UMASS FOULS

The backcourt duo of Mole and or Jim Laughnane worked with forwards Leslie and high-scorer Doug Grutchfield, as did big center Don Black, who gave the Redmen a big height advantage. The Judges were furer plagued by coach Zunic's use of Charlie Fohlin, Don Tremblay, Dave Elson, John Widdison, Charlie LaPier and Jeff Wheeler as competent reserves.

Leslie's 19 points and Grutch-field's 16 points in the first half were the basis of the comfortable 53-33 lead piled up by the Redmen by the midway point.

JUDGES ROAR BACK

In the second half an inspired Brandeis five came roaring back and the small but noisy crowd loved it. The action was wild and furious as the Judges closed the gap to 56-40. The men from Waltham thrilled the onlookers with their improved shooting and de fensive work at the beginning of the second half.

Big Business To Players, And They Want More Money

Reprinted from N.Y. Times

It is dandy to be an all-American, but after four years of viewing life through a face viewing life through a face guard many of these padded heroes see big-time college footas a business.

The all-America players undoubtedly love the game, but they take an unromantic view of the system that made them all-Americans. This was evi-denoed yesterday as they methodically autographed snow white footballs in a crowder white footballs in a crowd room at the Hotel Lexington.

The players had been brought here by Look magazine, which last week announced the selec-tion of its twenty-two-man all-America team. Some of them felt that their schools got more out of their football scholarships than they did themselves.

There was Mark Manders, a guard from Iowa, who felt that married football players were not treated fairly.
"You're doing a job for them,"

Manders said, "and married guys should receive fair play. We should get halfway decent expense accounts. I get eighty-seven bucks a month for room and board like all the single and board like all the s players and it's not enough.

The single players, such as Tee Moorman of Duke, Bill Miller of Miami and Mike Ditka of Pittsburgh, believe that the $10 or $15 a month they receive for inci-dentals is not in keeping with the profits made by their schools.

"We draw about $80,000 into the stadium every Saturday,"
Ditka said, "and we should get at least $30 a month for tooth-paste and clean shirts."

Some of the eleven players in-terviewed said that the policy on most campuses was win at all costs and that this had dulled their appetites for the game. Moorman, an end who will go to medical school, said he would not have played football if he had had enough money to attend college on his own.

ege football is ness," Moorman said. "After you find out the cold facts, that you're all just there for the same reason, the fun wears off."

Miller, a slim, intense fellow who is majoring in physical edu-cation, said it was difficult to have a normal college life at Miami with only $15 a month for "It costs a lot to go out on a date there,"he said. "I believe you should get more money for living expenses if you're on the first or second team."

A few minutes before the players gave their views, a Look representative said:

As was the case in former years, all the all-Americans re-

"We give them each a wrist watch, which does not impair amateur standing," man said.

But some of the players apparently feel that as all-Americans they should receive a bit more than wrist watches and

A person on the Look staff who has observed the players closely had this to say:

"Some are here to get every-thing they can at our expense. They've been taken care of in college and they expect to be taken care of now. It's not their fault. It's the system.
"Then there are some who are

"Then there are some who are just nice little animals. There's one so nice I feel like patting him on the head."

One or two of the players, according to the man from Look, asked to be "bankrolled" so they could go to a nightclub.

"Don't think this is an attitude confined to what are known as football foundries," the man said. "We've had some Ivy Leaguers who said they wouldn't stir out of their hotel rooms unless that had more asph." less they had more cash."

The players gave responses like this when asked how they felt about being chosen as the best amateurs in the game:

"The morning after out," Manders said, "my kid woke me up at 3 A. M. I felt just like I did the day before when (Continued on page 5)

Wrestlers Defeated, 21-9, By Worcester Tech In Opener only shining star in an otherwise dismal showing by the Douglas-men as he held his opponent, Ken Curry, scoreless, and won the 147

lb. match by a score of 3-0.

In the heavier divisions, W.P.I. displayed an undisputed superiority as Mike Kelly lost in the 157 lb. match to Pete Mello, 3-0, W.P.I.'s Rees pinned Masserelli to take the 167 lb. class, and Corvani pinned John Hartnett for the unlimited title. The only other winning performance was turned in by Dick Therrien as he beat Davis, 6-5, in the 177 lb.

UMass Pucksters Downed, 4-3, By U. Of Pennsylvania In Sudden Death Overtime

Last Friday night the UMass hockey team played host to the University of Pennsylvania in what turned out to be more like a three ring circus as it provided a little bit of everything. Penn won in sudden death overtime,

The game itself was one of the hardest fought and fastest you would ever want to see as both clubs really put on a show. In addition to the game the even-ing's entertainment included a pier-six brawl, a comic interlude provided by an over zealous fan on the ice, and to cap it all off a sudden death overtime period. All this for the price of admis-

REDMEN SCORE FIRST

The Redmen started in where they left off against AlC Tuesday when they scored twice in the first period. Frank Gilliatt put the puck in the net at 12:49, assisted by Art Stevens. UMass continued to swarm around the Penn net like flies and their huspaid off in another score at 14:16 when Bobby Glew lit the light, assisted by Warren Bassett make the score 2-0.

Pennsylvania salvaged some-thing from the period as they scored with only 57 seconds remaining. Bob Roland had made a great save but the puck rolled loose in front where alert Penn forward Warriner picked it up and put it in, assisted by Lyons who had made the original shot.

UMASS DOMINATES UMass dominated first period action as evidenced by the seventeen saves made ' Penn goalie Greenleaf. The Reamen offense was clicking beautifully and consequently they contained Penn in their own end a good deal of the period. For every shot Penn took UMass was able to get off two or three.

The second frame began just as fast and with four minutes gone Penn knotted the count as they caught the UMass defense they caught the UMass defense playing up too far and were able to break away for a score.

UMass finally got organized and at 12:34 they went out ahead again on a picture play. On a face off to the left of the Penn net Gilliatt got the puck back to Tom Taylor alone in front who slanned it in from about 15 feet. slapped it in from about 15 feet out. Although there was no more scoring in the period both teams had numerous chances but were unable to capitalize.

one of the most exciting ever seen at Orr Rink. With about five minutes played both teams received penalties. Then about two minutes later, just before the concurring infractions were over the fireworks began. It was then that one of the more aggressive Penn defenders made the mis-take of taking an illegal poke at fiery Billy Ryan. Mr. Ryan, not waiting for the official to meter out the punishment, took matters into his own hands. The ensuing action saw both benches clear into a spectacular free-for-all. The officials, with the aid of the coaches, broke it up before anyone really got hurt.

When peace was restored Ryan and his opponent found them-selves in the penalty box for five minutes and play resumed. At the 7:48 mark, with both teams short-handed, Warriner scored again for Penn. The speedy center broke away and had smooth sailing as he went in on goalie Roland unhampered from the blueline. This tied the score at 3-3 and although Penn put on a late minute surge the Redmen held to send the game into over-

SUDDEN DEATH

By this time the Redmen still feeling the effects of their necessary slow start in conditioning, were barely able to skate out of their own tracks. The Penn club, deeper in bench strength, wasted little time in the sudden-death post game period as they scored with only nineteen seconds having elapsed.

This was truly a heart breaker for the Kosakowski crew to lose, especially since they looked as good or better than their opponents throughout. The difference is similar to the control of in size was the whole story as Penn had more depth and was able to rotate their men every few minutes while the Redmen had to remain on the ice for long-er shifts. Also the Penn men were much bigger in stature and as the game progressed they used their size to advantage in gradually wearing down the Redmen, who actually did an amazing job in lasting as long as they did.

Bob Glew and Jim Ellingwood played well together and did a fine two-way job. Another spark fine two-way job. Another spark was Billy Ryan as he put on spectacular one-n

Provost McCune To Leave University; To Become UNESCO Education Director

Grades And Salaries Discussed By Faculty

by JERRY KAGAN '64 Collegian Staff Reporter

An analysis of the grade dis-tribution at UMass was the sub-ject of a faculty meeting held on December 8, 1960 in Bartlett Au ditorium, and a discussion of the new faculty was held last Monday evening in the S.U.

The analysis, explained by Provost McCune, was based on a comparison of students' grades from 1956 to 1960. Several not-able facts were brought out as a result of the tabulation of the total grades of the entire student body. Ten percent of the class of 1960 had a cumulative average of 3.1 or higher at the end of four years. This average gets lower with each class, and the freshman average is the greatest problem. The number of F's in the basic courses is twice that of the advance courses while the sum advance courses, while the number of A's is exceedingly more in the non-basic courses. This shows that as the students leave the basic courses and enter the advance courses their interest im-proves and along with interest,

About half of the students at UMass get an average of 2.2 or above, thus erasing the ever present rumor that "everybody flunks out". The figures show that it is not difficult to get an A or a B here. As a matter of fact, the number of A's and B's far outnumber the D's and F's. "The incoming freshmen," says

"The incoming freshmen," says McCune, "are improving each year." A comparison of College year." A comparison of College Board Scores of the classes of '63 and '64 was made, showing that the current freshmen lead the sophomores in scores ranging sophomores in scores ranging from 500 and up, and the fresh-men registered less in the lower scores. UMASS Loses A Provost UNESCO Gains A Director

Although the whole University has suffered a great loss with the resignation of Dr. Shannon McCune, who has accepted the post of Director of the Department of Education for UNESCO, the loss will particularly affect the students

Dr. McCune has a wide reputation for possessing a very warm and sympathetic attitude and understanding towards student problems. Although the University has long needed a Dean of Students, many feel that Dr. McCune filled this post while at the same time serving as Provost.

He was the man who was most missed while away on trips, such as the visit to Hokkaido University during September. It seemed to many of us that all activities had to cease until the provost returned during that period.

Dr. McCune has brought a great deal of prestige to us by his very association with the University. Widely recognized as an outstanding educator and administrator on the national and international levels, Dr. McCune has brought attention to the University at the many educational conferences he has attended over the past five years.

Through his diligent work, the University has been awarded an $85,000 grant from the Ford Foundation for social studies, $38,000 for the new language laboratories, and a host of other individual grants for studies in the sciences. He also was influential in gaining two $25,000 grants from the Ford Foundation For Education to support the New College recently formed by the four colleges in the Pres. John W. Lederle is the person who will probably feel the loss most of all. No longer will he be able to call upon the experience and advice of the provost. Perhaps the most significant aspect of Dr. McCune's departure is that Dr. Lederle will be on his own at the beginning of the year.

Dr. McCune will indeed be missed by students, faculty, and administrators alike.

We wish him the best of luck in his new post, and hope that he has gained as much out of his association with us as the University has gained from him.

On Dr. Willard Uphaus

"First, because I bear no ill will toward anyone, and second because I still believe I did the only thing that I could honorably have done, given my Christian philosophy and my loyalty to our Bill of Rights."

Dr. Willard Uphaus had been confined since December 14 of last year on the charge of contempt. This charge sprang from his refusal to surrender the names of those who attended World Fellowship, a summer camp in New Hampshire. New Hampshire's Attorney General Wyman had asserted that Dr. Uphaus' actions had been "nothing short of sacrilegious" and charged the doctor with trying to "manufacture a false front of martyrdom."

It is not difficult to see the ugly slime of McCarthyism beneath the political rhetoric of the Attorney General. Justices Brennan, Black, Douglas and Chief Justice Warren stated that the investigatory objective of the attorney general's investigation was "the impermissable one of exposure for exposure's sake,"

Yet, theirs was the minority decision and Dr. Uphaus' appeal was denied.

The Doctor was released from the Merrimack County jail last Sunday. He had not been alone in his confinement: with him was his Bible and his Walden. Indeed, with him was Paine, Thoreau, Jefferson, and all those who believe in and assert the essential dignity of man.

Quality or Quantity?

In a world of tension, where issues that occupy us, are political and economic, education is geared toward the production of a greater quantity of students rather than maintaining high academic standards. But is the policy of creating a supposedly educated, well motivated society the answer to the Soviet Union and the rest of the world?

But then, what alternative? An intelligent answer would be a policy to recreate the high academic standards that, in the past, created men and women of imagination and purpose

As students, we can attempt to recreate these standards by taking advantage of the many extra-curricular, academic activities and making use of the full capabilities of the instructors.

An education which has consisted of the required work per subject, is merely, half an education.

The choice is ours!

A NEW STEP TOWARDS A BROADER VIEW

by LORRAINE GELPEY '62

We have come to this university to become better educated men and women. It is a generally admitted fact that extraclassroom activity is as imant if not more important than strictly cur-ar study. This, of course, means interaction others in the community, usually fellow stuportant if ricular study. dents. Organized extra-curricular activities play a large part in this phase of our education but of even greater importance in the eyes of this writer even greater importise the bull session.

I can remember my freshman English teacher saying that the most important activities of college students take place in the dormitory after 12:00 p.m. My experience cries: "OH, yes!" But I am not writing this to advocate the bull session. If I were, I wouldn't be accomplishing a thing because bull sessions are by nature spontaneous. No one is going to read this and run to his friends saying, "Someone wrote an article in the Collegian about the value of bull sessions. Let's have one and see if she was right." But, although I am not openly suggesting that you sit right down with the guys on your floor and talk it out, I do feel that there ought to be more of this informal kind of idea-testing and forming than I see at the University. And I am afraid that even these bull sessions which do occur are not so profitable as they might be. Why?

The answer, it seems to me, lies in the simple fact that we are a state university in the most proract that we are a state university in the most provincial sense. Almost everyone at the University has the same general background as almost everyone else. Most of us are Massachusetts residents, come from middle-class economic strata, and have been educated in the public schools of the state. The admission policy is that only five percent of the student body can be from out-of-state and the truth of the matter is that only of the matter is that only one percent of the stu-dents here are from anywhere outside of Massachu-setts. How can our viewpoints differ greatly? The administration has offered at least a partial solution to this problem. At a Board of Trustees solution to this problem. At a Board of Trustees meeting this weekend it was decided to have an exchange program with Florida State University in Tallahassee. In this program, five UMass girls majoring in education will spend the spring semester of their junior year at Florida State and five girls from Florida, will be studying on our campus. The room, board, and tuition of the girls from Massachusetts would be the same as that of Florida residents; likewise, the girls from Florida will pay the same fees as students from Massachusetts. This program will be set up as soon as possible. will be set up as soon as possible

The motion as passed did not limit the program to exchange only with Florida State but will grow to encompass schools in other sections of the country as its success suggests.

The idea originated in the education department and at present only involves girls in that department. The proposal which was set before the trustees states: "Prospective teachers, perhaps more than any other group, ought to have an opportunity to experience first hand something of the vastness, variety and complexity of their own country." Although this may very well be true, I maintain that anyone with a truly liberal education also has to experience something more of our country than can be found here at the University of Massachusetts. This is a start and a fine one but we have to go farther. Five Florida students will help to broaden the students here but fifty or five hundred will do more toward achieving the goal which I feel the University should set for itself. I think we should have a diversified student body and also that as many of our students who wish to so broaden themselves and who are willing to incur the additional The idea originated in the education department selves and who are willing to incur the additional travel expense but not the out-of-state tuition fee should be able to spend at least one semester at another state uiversity. The exchange program is an exciting first step toward a better education for Massachusetts students.

YES, VIRGINIA, THERE ARE CLASSES TODAY

Dear Collegian Editor:

A lot of my friends say that there are no classes today because there is a big blizzard and almost a foot of snow already. But I didn't want to believe them, so I asked my counselor, and she told me to write to you, because she said that if you print something in your newspaper it must be true. So please tell me: are there classes today?

Love. Virginia

Dear Virginia,

Yes, Virginia, there are classes today. The fact that WBZ, WHMP, and at least two other big radio stations announced otherwise only shows that they rely on superficial facts and have no faith to believe in something, just because they can't see it. Have you ever seen succulent meals at the Commons? Of course not, but that's no reason to believe that there are none. And the fact that there are classes today is just as real as tasty Commons food.

Don't let your little friends change your mind.

They are merely bitter because they have suffered various unfortunate mishaps due to the preponderance of confusion. Some have stayed up all night studying for exams, and then studied all morning, too (once the word was spread that classes would be held), just to find that when they arrived at the class, weary and cold—but boned up, there at the class, weary and cold—but boned up, there was no instructor present to administer the exam. Others optimistically awoke, planning to attend their classes despite the weather; and when the radios announced "absolutely no classes this morning at the U. of Mass." they went back to sleep—only to learn that theirs was one of the few classes in which the instructor actually arrived . . . and also took attendance, assigned cuts, and gave an exam—which could not be made up without penalty.

Just because the great majority of the instruc-Just because the great majority of the instructors are not at their designated classes does not mean that there are no classes. How absurd! And perhaps you are attending your classes, only to find that even if the instructor is present, not enough students have managed to attend for the day's work to be carried out, so you virtually waste the hour. But Virginia, the fact still remains that there are classes being held today—officially.

So dress warmly, Virginia, wrap your books in plastic, step out of your dorm, and let the first big plastic, step out of your dorm, and let the first big gust of wind lift you off the ground and carry you all the way over to Bartlett Hall. You may find an empty classroom today and catch a severe cold in days to come, but remember, Virginia: as long as confusion remains in the minds of all of us here at the University when we awake and find a blizzard upon us, and as long as the administration believes —in their hearts—that students and faculty will find some way to attend against insurmountable odds, classes will be officially held.

Yes, Virginia, there are classes today.

Dr. John King And Chorale To Present Yule Music

The sounds of Christmas will ring through Bowker Auditorium tonight at eight, once again under the direction of Dr. John King.

Dr. King, a graduate of Cambridge University, and the Royal College of Music, has been with the Chorale for three years, and has presented such ambitious works as choruses from the Messiah and Holst's Christmas Fantasy. This year the Chorale will sing a program including Britten's Ceremony of Carols, Vaughn Williams' Fantasia of Christmas Carols, and Presenta-Christmas Carols, and Presenta tion of Christ in the Temple.

Alice Stusick of Springfield Alice Stusick of Springheid will accompany Britten's work on the harp. The audience will have the unique pleasure of singing Christmas carols accompanied by Christmas carols accompanied by members of the concert band. Ad-

Dedicated Redmen fans will have to wait till February 14th for a return match with Hugh Greer's Pups. Last year the Redmen split with UConn by winning at home. This year they'll have to do the same if they still have hopes of winning the bean pot. In the prelim, UMass' highly rated freshmen were pounded into submission, 90-58, by an aroused UConn frosh. The big and fast Pups led from the onset and were never in serious trouble. The lone UMass bright spot was six foot guard Bob Johnson who notched all of his seventeen points in the second half. The thirty two point gap in the final score came as a surprise to those who had rated this game as a battle of equals. "FIND THE ANSWER, JIM-AND BRING IT BACK"

When Jim Boardman took his B.S. in Electrical Engineering at Colorado State, there was one idea uppermost in his mind. He wanted a job in which he could work his way into management via the engineering route. As he puts it, "I didn't want to stick with straight engineering all my life."

After talking to eight other organizations Jim joined The Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Company. He soon got the kind of action he was looking for.

His first assignment: How best to improve widely scattered rural telephone service all over Colorado—a sticky engineering challenge. He was given a free hand to work out his own procedures. His boss simply said, "Find the answer, Jim—and bring it back."

Six months later, Jim turned in his recommendations. His plan was accepted.

Next stop: Colorado Springs. Here Jim worked out a plan to expand telephone facilities for this burgeoning community. This plan, too, is now in operation.

Today, at 24, Jim has an important role in planning where, how much, and what kind of telephone service is needed in the Denver area.

Here's how Jim puts it: "We get tough assignments-but we also have the freedom to take hold and do a job. I think the future here is unlimited. If a man wants to do it—it's there to be done."

If you're a guy who can "Find the answer— and bring it back"—you'll want to get with a company where you have the chance. Visit your Placement Office for literature and additional information.

"Our number one aim is to have in all management jobs the most vital, intelligent, positive and imaginative men we can possibly find."

As the Fraternity leagues swing into their second week of action we find Sigma Alpha Epsilon leading League A and Tau Kappa Epsilon and Kappa Sigma tied for honors in League B.

In Monday's action both SAE and KS romped to easy victories over their unprepared opponents.

SAE, behind sophomore Ken Kezer easily upset Phi Mu Delta 38-16. SAE literally ran circles around their opponents as they broke away very early in the game to clinch the contest. So far this year no team has been able to score at least twenty points against this team. High scorers for SAE were Ken Kezer with ten points, Conlin also with ten, and Kenny Fallon with six points.

A MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT:

It is a privilege to share with you this Christmas season in New England—and on one of New England's most beautiful campuses. Though I am admittedly a late-comer from the Mid-West, I have nevertheless always felt that Christmas in New England must be something special.

It is possible the feeling was compounded of recollections of Grandma Moses' Christmas paintings and dim memories of references to the season in Longfellow's poems. In any event, somewhere in my past, Christmas, and New England, and Massachusetts sustained a natur-al, though of course not exclusive, juxtaposition.

It is, therefore, in a spirit of sincere friend-ship that I greet you and wish you the very best that the season can afford. In my view, the greatest gift it can afford is a common faith—a faith that, despite the barricades, there can be a faith that, despite the barricades, there can be brotherhood; despite divisions among nations, there can be a better world; despite cynicism and rancor, there can be good-will among men. In wishing you the happiest of holidays, I ask only that you pause once or twice during the bright festivities of the season to think a little on these things, that "peace on earth" may thereby come closer to being man's greatest wift to man. gift to man.

Most cordially.

FROM THE EDITORS:

Brotherhood and Christmas

Christmas 1960 is virtually upon us.

With each year the true meaning and spiritual significance of Christendom's highest holiday be comes more and more clouded behind thoughts of a material nature.

Whatever one's own religious belief, this holiday season is a time of brotherhood and friendliness toward all mankind. It is a time to cherish associations with all whom we encounter.

The true Spirit of Christmas cannot prevail upon us for only the brief annual span of the holiday observances, but most continue throughout the year. Brotherhood without bigotry and prejudice must be manifested as a 'year-round'

It is this Spirit of Christmas which gives this season its tremendous value. It is not the anticipation of the giving and receiving of things material that is of consequence, but rather the giving of one's self toward the enrichment of the spiritual lives of others which is of major importance. In an age cherishing dog-eat-dog competitiveness, and exalting material success beyond all else, it is a joyous act to express feeling for others. Appreciation of our fellow man cannot be measured in monetary terms.

The editors of the Collegian hope that each of us can find and appreciate the true meaning of the Christmas observance, and demonstrate to everyone the spirit of brotherhood today, tomorrow, next week and next year.

UMass Chaplains Offer Holiday Messages

"Let all mortal flesh keep silence And with fear and trembling stand; Ponder nothing earthly-minded For with blessing in his hand Christ our God to earth descendeth Our full homage to demand."

FROM THE LITURGY OF ST. JAMES

In just a few days the last suitcase will be packed, the last car will have left, and the campus will become quiet. Even the confusion around the Student Union Christmas tree and the carols over the campus PA will have ceased. All will be silent again.

My hope is that you too will become silent from time to time in these coming days to ponder anew the miracle we are celebrating. My prayer is that you will not miss the true significance of the season as your activity quickens. If this little babe be the Lord of the universe incarnate, this is not an event to celebrate glibly.

A Merry Christmas to you and to your family! Russell G. Claussen

It hath been told thee, O man,

And what the Lord doth require of thee:

Only to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God.

MICAH 6:8

Chanukah, perhaps more than any other holiday in the Jewish calendar, emphasizes the ideal of religious freedom. Originating in the successful defense of Judaism against the onslaught of Syrio-Greek paganism, the observance of Chanukah through the ages has been the occasion for a yearly affirmation of Jewish devotion to freedom of religion, not only for ourselves as Jews, but for all men.

This year we again make that affirmation. As we look forward with our Christian friends, towards the observance of our respective holidays, may the freedom in which we do so continue to flourish, that we may be enabled to enrich our lives with the religion of our choice, in devotion to God and in service to our fellow men.

CHRISTMAS-1960

The holy season rapidly approaching seems to bring Our Lord so close to us. At the same time it also reminds us of the burning desire we should have to imitate Him if Christmas is to have a practical meaning for us.

Now of course the purpose of Jesus Christ in becoming man was to save us. But He also wished to live as one of us, to teach us how we must live. This teaching began in the stable of Bethlehem. It continued during His entire life on earth even unto death. In the course of thirty-three years, He gave us most sublime instruction, both in word and example. However, from it all, as a beacon light, was the language and lesson of love. At this time of the year as we think of His love for us, we can ask ourselves the degree of our love for Him, expressed in our love for our

On our campus, coming from such a diversity of traditions, surely we have the opportunity of giving true meaning to this wondrous day. "Love thy neighbor as thyself, for the love of God." What greater wish could we have, one for the other. What richer prayer could we offer, that in each of us the true spirit of Christmas might live today and every day.

This is my prayerful wish for our entire University family-a holy and a blessed Christmas.

Father Power

The star glittereth as a flame and discovereth God, the King of Kings.

SECOND VESPERS, EPIPHANY

Dear friend, dear Scrooge, dear critic, dear my friend and gentle heart and man: though seasons send no bells, no star, no angel dripping love through slush dim jangled streets, though from above grotesque, the screaming jets will shake our tree, frail-branched, already brittle, still let's be content to approximate mythology:

Though we achieve no miracle, but live the common discontent, vexatious, etiff and stuffed with minor ills, and get no grace and doubt the time, and often curse the place, in short, are human: let it be enough. Let's joy in unredeemed and graceless love, let's honor birth like ours, among the beasts and celebrate all partial lives with feasts.

REAFFIRMATION

Christmas or is it Xmas Gaudy tinsel wrapped packages Department stores dressed up As harlots As nariots Peddling their wares.
Pillow stuffed Macy santa clauses
Seducing passers-by to buy
Electric trains, tinker toys,
Dolls that wet and blink their eyes. Lists to Santa: I want, I want, I want. Christmas clubs To matrons, mothers, all, Christmas becomes buy! buy! buy!

Think of Christ in swaddling clothes With the braying and bellowing Of cattle His Christmas carol. His Christmas carol.
Adoring Mother Mary
What gifts had she?
But a mother's love
For the new-born Son of God,
Who was to give the Supreme Gift to Man.

HOLIDAY GREETINGS

Happy Holidays, Everyone!

My good wishes to each of you for a vacation with lots of sleep, lots of fun, and good visits with families and friends.

May the deeper meaning of these great holidays give you joy and courage to begin your new year.

Helen Curtis

It is my sincere hope that all our students will have a refreshing holiday and that when they return in 1961, they will do so with a renewed vigor and a desire to work hard enough to gain the education which we hope we are making available for

The festivities and joys of the Christmas season are once again with us. The time of gift-giving and celebration, Christmas is also the time for re-assessing, re-evaluating the meaning behind it.

Christmas spirit has more and more frequently been criticized for its aura of commercialism. A criticism of this nature, undoubtedly, can be supported with evidence. And perhaps, in this collection of poetry many will find a note of pessimism, despair at the trends we as a nation are taking. Yet, we hope that out of this a note of optimism will shine through.

through. At our moment in history man is confronted with self-annihilation. Is it no wonder, then, that all of us, during this season, should review the meaning behind the meaning of the Christmas season? Christmas is for us the symbol of man's brotherhood. Its meaning can not be found in sentimental diversion.

erhood. Its meaning can not diversion.

The Christmas season (not the 26 shopping days before the 25th) is the yearly reaffirmation of man's conviction—his belief in a life, not as a wild hungry beast, but, as a brother among brothers.

Have a memorable Christmas.

HOPE

The holiday season imparts hope to all. It is a hope that we have already seen, be it in South Africa or Alabama. It is a hope that man can live with his fellow man in peace. It is a hope that intolerance and prejudice will give way to good-will and equality. It is a hope that the reason of Man will triumph over the terrible destructive forces at his disposal.
